The Cohasset Historical Society's third historical walking tour to the town's historic sites will be held at 3 p.m. Sunday, Sept. 9.

Following two well-attended Sunday historical tours held this summer, the Sept. 9 walk completes the series of three events of this type offered this year by the Society.

The subjects of the forthcoming walk will include a visit to Cohasset's historic First Parish Meeting House on the Common, a walk around the Common to view the gracious homes and to hear of the history of this traditional New England Town Common, and a visit to Cohasset's center village which itself contains numerous buildings of historical importance.

The tour will meet at 3 p.m. at the old Meeting House on the Common, where Rev. Edward Atkinson will speak about the early history of this unique building and its role in the development of the Town's religious life and governmental matters from the time of its construction in 1747. There will be an opportunity to walk through the Meeting House.

Following this, former Common Historic District Commission member Charles Wheelwright will lead the tour around the Common itself, followed by Society Curator David Wadsworth who will talk about the old buildings at Cohasset Center, a residential neighborhood which became the town's center of commerce. The walking tour will end at the Society's Maritime Museum at the Center where light refreshments will be served. A donation of $1 is requested.

Piano lessons

Students of all ages are invited to join the piano classes of Priscilla Daniels of Cohasset.

She stresses the importance of music theory, harmony and rhythm study, as the essentials of piano background, and she incorporates these into every weekly lesson. She emphasizes the importance of consistent practice habits, which leads to self confidence in her students.

Daniels is a graduate of the New England Conservatory of Music, magna cum laude, with over 25 years experience in teaching.

She has recently played at the Parker in Boston, and South Shore restaurants, and is currently playing during the dinner hours, Sunday through Wednesdays at Hugo's in Cohasset.

How was your summer?

"It's been a great summer but we're looking forward to the fall. The kids are getting bored now. It's been a great, fast summer and the kids have been very busy with swimming lessons, recreation, the beach and the town pool. We have to say, Cohasset is a great place to spend the summer, they have so many activities for the kids."

Ruth Clark

Second grade teacher, Osgood School

"There's a lot of anticipation beginning a new school year. I think the teachers are more nervous than the students. I have a whole new little crew each year. But we all met one day last year, and I know they're wonderful. This year my second graders can expect lots of reading, writing and arithmetic and a great new Science program."

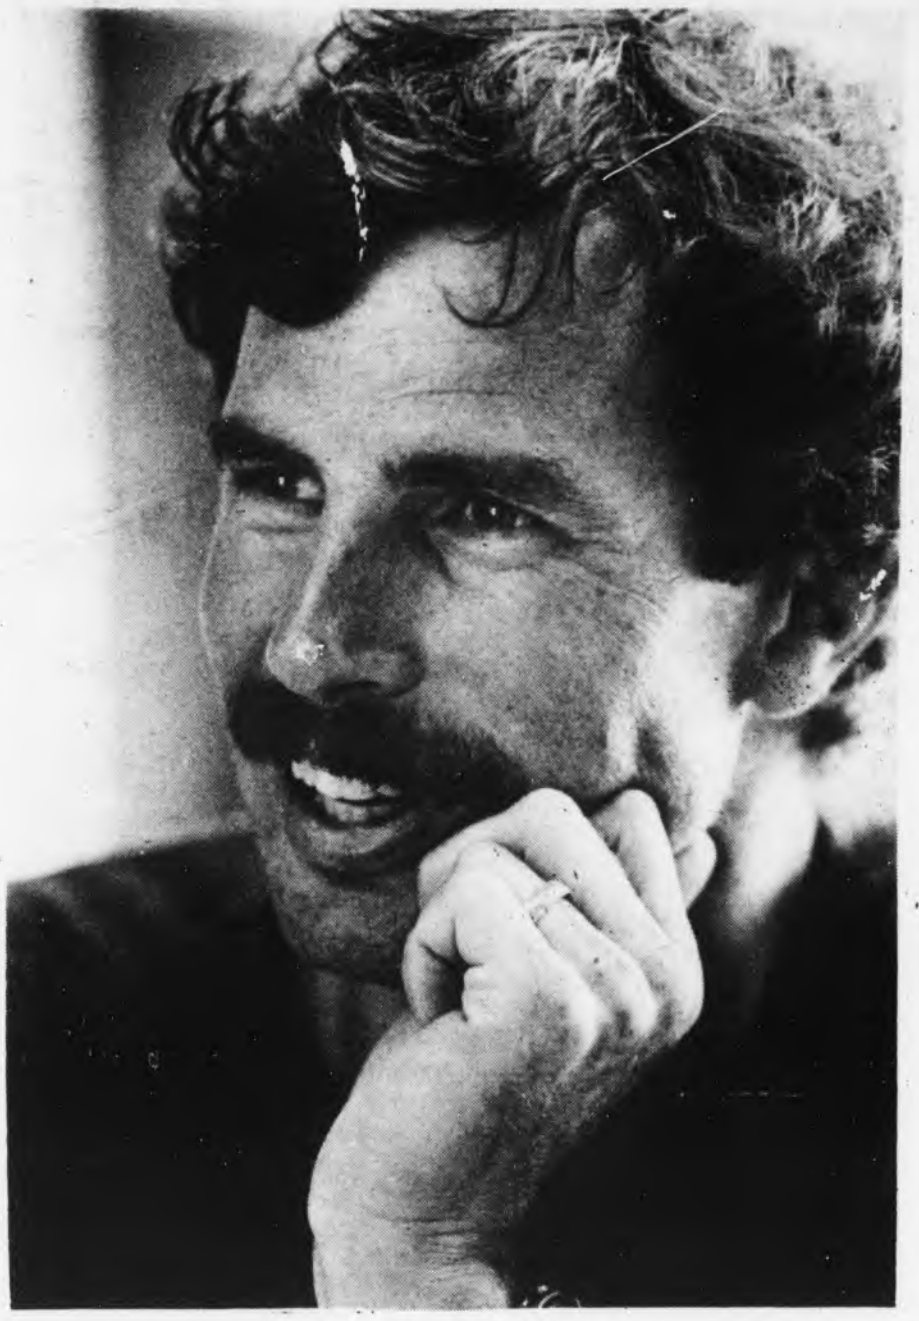
AUTUMN FIRES

In the other gardens
And all up the vale,
From the autumn bonfires
See the smoke trail!

Pleasant summer over
And all the summer flowers,
The red fire blazes,
The grey smoke towers.

Sing a song of seasons!
Something bright in all!
Flowers in the summer,
Fires in the fall!



Robert Louis Stevenson

Looking forward to the fall?

Courtney Goff
Age 6

"I'm going into kindergarten at the Osgood School and my teacher is Mrs. Collins. I want to go back to school because she is a nice lady. We make a lot of things in school and I have a lot of friends. We did a lot this summer - boating, fishing, and swimming lessons. I passed my swimming test and next year I'm going to be an advanced beginner. I also liked going to Grammie's pool this summer."

Jon Anderson

High school math teacher and coach

"It's been a terrific summer but I'm looking forward to the fall. As a teacher, I look forward to meeting the new kids and teaching new courses. Everything is fresh in the fall and the kids are eager to learn. As a soccer coach, the kids seem eager to start, hopeful to make the team. I think the fall is a nice time of the year."

The Jocks

Jay Contis, Mark Lahive, and Troy Chatterton-

"Yeah, we're looking forward to school because we'll be seniors and that's supposed to be the best year. It should be fun. We're all thinking about going to college. Football practice has been pretty strenuous but there's a better attitude this year with our new coach. We're 'cautiously optimistic' about our chances this fall. We're glad summer's over. We all had to work."

Area Civic Softball League

By Karen Fanning

Last week was the first round playoff action for the Area Civic Softball League.

In the best two out of three game series, Strawberry Parfait came out to an early one game advantage.

In their first contest with Marshfield Sunoco, Strawberry Parfait jumped on top, 11-5, giving themselves the psychological edge for Saturday's game at Central One Field (10 a.m.), when they meet their opponents for a second time.

In other first round action, Clipper Ship and Hugo's have split the series. It was a tough loss for Hugo's, as the Clipper Ship pulled off a 9-8 victory in the first game.

However, the Clipper Ship win was not left unanswered.

Hugo's returned in the second game with a powerhouse offensive display, clobbering the Clipper, 25-1.

The two teams will face off at Beechwood Field, Cohasset (10 a.m.) for the third and final match Saturday.

What does the future hold for the winners of round one? Building 19 and L Street Pub.

The winners of round one will contend with Division One first place Building 19 and Division Two first place L Street Pub in a best three out of five game second round series, beginning next week.

And on to the semi-finals they go.

Strawberry Parfait, Hugo's, Building 19, and L Street Pub will begin their quest for the "gold" Saturday, Sept. 1, in a three out of five game semi-final series.

In quarter final action, Hugo's sailed by the Clipper Ship to an 18-8 victory. Eight seemed to be the unlucky number.

Although Marshfield Sunoco came up with eight runs, they, too were unable to defeat their opponents, losing to Strawberry Parfait, 13-8.

With these two stunning victories, Hugo's and Strawberry Parfait qualified for the semi-finals.

The competition has narrowed down and the heat is on.

Hugo's must now face Division 1 first place Building 19, head on, this Saturday and Sunday at Hingham High School Field at 10 a.m.

While Hugo's is contending with Building 19, Strawberry Parfait will be battling it out with Division 2 first place L Street Pub at Beechwood Field, Cohasset.

Saturday, Sept. 8 and Sunday Sept. 9 if necessary, the best three out of five game series will continue.

APEX
The pricing on international flights is certainly more uniform than on domestic flights. The reason is that the International Air Transport Association (IATA), a powerful industry trade organization, acts as a pricing cartel by recommending fare levels for most international airlines. In turn, the prices on given routes are then approved by the respective governments. Since nearly all major international carriers belong to IATA, there is not nearly as much variance in international air fares as there is domestically. Amidst the "recommended" prices, however, is the Advance Purchase Excursion (APEX) fare, which can typically save passengers at least 50% of the standard coach fare on international round trips. Most APEX fares require 21-day advance bookings and purchase, and a minimum stay of 6-14 days.

This 'renegade' superintendent assesses school's course

By Judy Foley

Dr. Clifford Easton, Superintendent/Director of the South Shore Vocational Technical School, assesses his first three years on the job — a rocky, controversial tenure — with the same calm determination, sometimes defiance, with which he has turned the state's smallest vocational school into a thriving, dual campus institute.

He sits away from his desk at his office at the Hanover school, preferring a group of chairs in a conversational circle. With a neatly trimmed sand colored beard and open shirt, he is casual, composed and, as always, extremely candid. He pauses for just one deep breath before passing comment on his first three years in office.

Cliff Easton came to the South Shore from Minuteman Vocational School in Lexington, not as the school committee's first choice but with an aggressive attitude about vocational education in general and the South Shore VoTech in particular.

Under his guidance, the region has grown from six to eight towns: Hanover, Norwell, Scituate, Cohasset, Rockland, Abington, Whitman and Hanson. The school has outgrown its Hanover campus and has opened an Abington satellite school. The curriculum has grown from 11 programs to 19, with the rapid addition of heating, ventilation and air conditioning (HVAC), culinary arts, cosmetology, packaging technology, painting and wall finishing, graphic arts, marine technology, and management, marketing and merchandising. Enrollment has grown from 374 to over 530. This fall the school will open a post-secondary Technical Institute in conjunction with Quincy Junior College.

It has not been done without antagonizing some of its member towns — particularly Hanover, its host community — and Easton acknowledges that the pace must now slow down. When he assumed duties three years ago, he dealt with a close knit six-member regional committee which approved nearly all his expansion plans. Today he must deal with an eight-member committee appointed by selectmen, with only three of the original members still actively involved. This broader committee has begun to take a more careful approach to future plans. But Easton is still as enthusiastic as his first day on the job.

"These three years have probably been as professionally satisfying as any period in my life," he says. "I am still high on this school and on its potential; I'm perhaps more optimistic than when I came.

"It has been like a new birth for the school. Like many births, it has not been without difficulties and labor; yet, like a child born through labor and pain, you love it just as much as your other children. Many people on the staff have grown to love the school more. Enthusiasm has taken over in a sense.

"We have gone as fast and as far as we need to go...I see us pulling ourselves together now."
—Dr. Clifford Easton

"There is some disagreement of philosophy and a tightening up on the committee. There is no question that we need to do more, but I share their concerns that we need to step a lot more cautiously in the future."

He does not hesitate on the appropriateness of the school's growth. "We did the right things at the right times for the right reasons. But we have to look more cautiously at the means to make more changes.

"The accomplishments have been nothing less than miraculous. It was the timing, but a lot of people contributed. There was the right attitude on education in the region, the Department of Education, the committee and the staff. . . It all results from a coordinated effort. Often the superintendent gets the credit and the blame, but in both cases it must be shared."

This fall the Technical Institute will open a new avenue of education for the South Shore VoTech: a post-secondary program in conjunction with Quincy Junior College that offers an associate degree in four programs. Initial registration has been good but will continue until Sept. 7, three days after the courses begin.

It is a venture into grant applications and corporate partnerships. The institute has applications pending for over $300,000 in matching grant funds and is working to net corporate donations for those matching funds. An assistant hired through a grant, Paul Smith, works exclusively towards winning those grants and developing links between the institute and major industries. The VoTech High School will provide the basis for the institute and will reap its benefits, but will not be liable in its day-to-day functions or its debts, the superintendent vows.

"Our job is to stimulate more. The future is extremely exciting. The best years lay ahead."

Easton speaks of the school's responsibility to the students and to the needs of the region. "We have always had a mission to young people; it has been a quiet mission, but I have been able to publicize it and keep the issue alive, and through that we've gotten people involved in the process.

"The school has always been successful as a high school. The problem has been that we never get a second chance at them. At the high school level we prepare them for entry-level positions, but at the post-secondary level we have the opportunity to provide upgraded training, retraining or initial training. That's where the Technical Institute comes in.

"Today people are not only moving from job to job; they're moving from career to career. We can provide the training for high tech jobs and provide an associate degree in science. Ultimately, we hope to offer an associate degree in engineering.

"We have a hefty goal to secure $1 million in donations and services by June 1985. It's a lot; we may not get it. But if you don't aim high, you won't get anything.

"Industry is excited about it. I believe that the South Shore area is about to become the next high tech area in New England, and we need to provide a high profile for technology. It is a clean, good paying industry. People don't want the area filled with smoke and chemical dumps. They want a good future for their kids and a positive economic future for themselves. The South Shore Chamber of Commerce, Plymouth Chamber and other economic development groups all have the same goal in mind. We want to be part of it by providing the technological training.

"I'm not talking about something that's going to happen — it is happening," he says. "I'm just as much an idealist as I was three years ago. I believe you have to aim high and for the right reasons."

He pauses, perhaps for deep reflection, perhaps for dramatic effect. "People ask why I feel so sure of things and feel so positive. Some people might think I am a little impulsive. The truth is that I give a great deal of thought to any of my recommendations. I'm a prayerful person. If I feel there is a direction to take, it is almost inspired and I stand firmly behind it and move toward that goal. God hasn't been wrong yet. I believe — and I don't know what you'll do with this — I believe I'm

The best of Dapper O'Neill and the City Council

By Lois Martin

At 12:45 a.m. I discovered something I never dreamed existed: the best of Dapper O'Neill.

Honest. Dapper and the rest of the Boston City Council have been one of the by-products of moving here 13 years ago that I hadn't counted on. No real estate agent had mentioned them, that was wise.

Because when you live near Boston you're going to get the Boston hogwash with your news whether you want it or not. Hub politics is indigenous to the area, like mildew and late March snow storms.

PATCHES

The occasional news clips of Boston City Council performing antics in lieu of duties has simply been one of the annoying nuances we deal with; until it's over, reminiscent of a miserable blister.

That had been my exposure to Dapper, that and a lengthy article in a Sunday newspaper that read for want of better copy one day.

And I'd come to believe, without ever affirming or discussing the man with other people, that 1) the Boston City Council was a study in baloney represented as being city business; 2) that Dapper was the foremost among those skilled at baloney.

So it was that his 'other side' came as an astounding revelation to me, never mind that it was in the midst of the night.

I woke up for some reason. And I flipped on the radio to one of those all-nighters who keep talking. It was per chance, Larry Glick, who was talking with an acquaintance he viewed as a zipper.

He had a record to play for her, one he said she'd love.

It was "The Irish Belly Dancer," words and music by Rik Tinnory who lives in Cohasset, I think, if they've forgiven him.

...Sung by Dapper O'Neill.

Half asleep when Larry announced the ditty, I was brought to wide-awake laughter within Dapper's first five notes.

He goes right at the song, holding nothing back, founding his bravado on the times his mother must have told him he had a great voice.

And it really isn't bad. He charged ahead: "Oh, the Irish belly dancer, To me she was the answer..."

That's the beginning of the verse. When Dapper got to the chorus, he really hit it.

"...Shake that belly, Nelly.."

I tell you I was beside myself with laughter, there in the dark, grinning from ear to ear and discovering the best of Dapper O'Neill.

A critic might have said the song was two minutes longer than was a fair burden for the listener. But he never let up, each verse, accentuated by each chorus, was belted with unerring gusto and determination.

It was wonderful.

I pictured him at the mike in the recording studio, finally having both of those to himself instead of sharing it with the interfering opinions of discordant city councilmen.

And Rik's song. It's funny. It's about Nancy Kelly with her belly-shaking skills, seducing the likes of a responsive man like Dapper. Romance, daring and innocence propelled through the unmodulated tones of Dapper.

To say that Dapper with his rousing roostering of "Shake that belly, Nelly," has changed my life would be, you'll understand, an undue exaggeration.

But it has changed my view of life. He's a better man in my eyes because of his musical adulation of Nelly's belly. And that's a fact.

Because of that I've softened my position on a type of revenge I've considered. After the last televised inside view of the Boston City Council, I'd hoped to find sponsors who'd ship tapes of our Selectmen's meetings for the Boston viewing audience. It seemed only fair to me. Furthermore I wanted them to follow our campaigns down here, (skip the North Shore, okay?) We'd have all our candidates use up their news time with views on South Shore transportation, the reconstruction of our town piers and what acid rain means to us.

Dapper has changed all that, surmounted my scheming nature. Now I rather look forward to the next clip of his performance in the City Council.

And the day he slips into his rendition of "The Irish Belly Dancer," right there in the midst of a classic council harangue, Boston will be better for it.

Musings

By John H. Cutler

☐ Home hint in the Western Family magazine: When she washes dishes, he should wash dishes with her, and when she mops up the floor, he should mop up the floor with her.

☐ Hot weather quote in the Evansville (IN) Courier: She's no good; she has a record as long as my arm, reaching from California to North Carolina.

☐ Joe Kennedy, the Founding Father, said in the early 1930s, "I have no political ambitions for myself or my children..."

☐ President Dwight Eisenhower once said the Allies had probably prevailed on D Day because of their superior meteorologists. And believe it or not, Ike never read The Longest Day.

☐ The apparel off proclaims the woman.

☐ I didn't say he was naive. I merely said I heard him ask a bartender if he needed a doctor's prescription for a bourbon highball.

☐ Most persons, no matter how well educated, don't know the difference between "comprise" and "compose." Wilson Follett explains in the following ditty: "The whole comprises the parts; the parts are comprised in the whole; the whole is composed of its parts; the parts compose the whole."

☐ Boxers shake hands when they enter the ring. During WWII Gene Tunney and I were having breakfast at the Copacabana in Rio de Janeiro when Gene said in a dreamy way, "You know, I could have beaten Gentleman Jim Corbett" (an earlier heavyweight boxing champion of the world who was noted as the most skillful fighter of his era). "The only time you would have touched Corbett," I said, "would have been when you shook hands at the beginning of the fight." Tunney shook his head. "Remember, John, I could box, too, and I could hit a lot harder."

☐ Political conventions remind me that the only person who can speak louder than a politician is another politician, especially if two senators are involved.

Sewer Commission against report funding priority for the on-site rehabilitation and small diameter collector sewer plans.

"By separating this project you have defied the Construction Grant Regulations which require that our town be treated as one entity. By declaring that Massachusetts will not fund alternative collectors and on-site rehabilitation, you have attempted to override the law and thereby deny the legally-guaranteed financial benefits of this program to Cohasset, Kingston and every other small community within the Commonwealth."

Increasingly angered by the barrage of bureaucracy confronting Cohasset at each turn, DeSantis told DEQE officials last week, "we (Cohasset) have received only disdain, deceit, and repeated attempts of intimidation for our efforts to comply with the law. We refuse to allow the law to be misapplied - a law specifically passed to serve the small towns of this country, the majority of towns in this state."

Alluding to DEQE's previous funding refusal which Cohasset has appealed to Region 1 of the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), DeSantis added, "we and other towns within this Commonwealth have an equal stake in Cohasset's appeal. Rest assured we will put forth our best effort. We are confident that in this nation of law, we shall prevail."

In between a confusing schedule of meetings, the sewer commissioners have also met with representatives of Sen. Edward Kennedy, Congressman Gerry Studds and Congressional candidate Lew Crampton. All three men have pledged support for Cohasset's efforts to appeal DEQE's grant rejection.

These have been the best years for Easton

God's man for this job. I was not the first choice, but for that and a lot of reasons beyond that, I'm humbled rather than proud. I have a responsibility, to the taxpayers, but also to a much higher. authority."

Some extoll Cliff Easton for his positive outlook on technical education and his contagious enthusiasm for his school. Others say this self-described 'renegade' superintendent has gone too far too fast, without regard to budgets, at a time when local schools have had to cut costs and programs. He accepts those criticisms with the same composure as his commendations.

"I believe we have gone as fast as necessary, but I agree that it has been at the expense of some things. I believe we should take a cautious approach now.

"We have gone as fast and as far as we needed to go. The goal now is to improve the quality of the education, to update with state-of-the-art equipment and to solidify the Technical Institute. The Technical Institute may grow slowly. We have four programs now, and we must plan careful growth.

"I see us pulling ourselves together now. I think the criticism is just — it's just a little early."

He defends his budget but warns that next year's figures will be "a shock."

"For three years I've done my darnedest to reduce capital expenditures, supplies, overtime and energy costs. I got burned last year; we spent over $70,000 more than budgeted. I tried to lower the electricity as much as possible, but it inched up. There is no place to shave. The school committee was pretty mad, but I've always tried to give an honest budget that was also indicative of need.

"The budget to be presented will be based on need, and I'm fairly certain there will be an increase. We've had $175,000 for capital purchases in the last five years. We have equipment here that is down and needs to be replaced. If a piece costs $2,400 new and $1,500 to repair, it's just not cost-effective to repair it. Some of our equipment is super-old; some predates World War II. The equipment has got to be dealt with. It has been short-changed since I've been here and before."

The school committee, on its own initiative, is now studying plans to expand the Hanover campus and combine the entire school at one site. A building committee has been named to begin preliminary talks with the School Board Assistance Bureau this fall, but Easton feels it will take a couple of years before the project gets off the ground. Although he did not make the recommendation, he sees potential in a larger Hanover campus for expanded shops and extra room for community programs during the day.

He does not mince words; he is not afraid to fight for what he believes to be right for his school; he does not sit back on past accomplishments. For the first time, he speaks in terms of "caution" and "planning," but he has not stopped thinking in terms of the future. Divinely-inspired or arrogantly determined, he continues to pave new ground for the South Shore VoTech.

Perhaps in Siasconset, Wisconsin, or someplace such as Hubbardston, Texas, Labor Day weekend comes and goes and life goes on much the same. Here on the South Shore though, the three-day weekend heralds a dramatic change in our life style as the summer season draws to a close. Our roads are less traveled, the restaurants have a table or two that are ours for the asking. The beaches belong to us and the sea gulls and one's appetite is whetted after a walk on the solitary sands. Long ago, Maggie Manley gave me a batch of recipes from Ray Kroc's book "Grinding It Out," a history of the McDonald's Restaurant at the "sign of the golden arches." Here is how to make their

BIG MAC SPECIAL SAUCE

Combine 1 c. Miracle Whip Salad dressing with 1/3 c. bottled creamy French dressing
1/4 c. sweet pickle relish (undrained)
1 T sugar
1/4 tsp. pepper
1 tsp. dry minced onion

Blend it well and keep refrigerated in covered container. Makes almost 2 c. sauce. Spoon over piping hot hamburgers and serve as often as possible. "When you do, pretend you are at the Golden Arches where somebody else is cleaning the kitchen after dinner."

Shopping at the supermarket is less of a hassle now that we don't have to share the aisles with our summer visitors and finding an empty shopping cart is less of a challenge. Those of us who are in a hurry to speed up the week's marketing and get on to more interesting pursuits, have learned that Tuesday afternoons are said to be a good time to shop — by then the shelves have been replenished and the store is apt to be less crowded. Remember to eat before you shop — it's dangerous to market when you're hungry, for everything looks so tempting. Some smart shoppers can be seen with calculators, checking unit prices and keeping within the limits of the weekly budget. Those expecting company over the holiday weekend may want to pick up some syrian bread, or what others call pita bread to make these snacks called

PITA TOASTS

In a bowl cream together 1½ sticks butter (or oleo), softened, 2 T minced parsley, 1 T each of snipped chives and lemon juice, 1 large garlic clove, crushed and minced and salt and pepper to taste. Cover mixture and let stand for at least an hour. Half each round slice into two pieces and spread with some of the butter mixture. Arrange pita on a baking sheet and bake on the top shelf of a preheated 450 degree oven for 5 min., or until it is lightly browned and crisp. Can be made ahead and packed in air-tight tin containers, or plastic bag for future use.

After Labor Day, the tempo of life quickens with the changing season and Irene Hall has a few suggestions for ways to get out of the kitchen and into the round of fall activities. Here's her make-ahead seasoning mix that's always ready for salads:

Combine 2 T salt
1 T paprika
1 T dry mustard
1/2 tsp. black pepper and store in a screw-top jar.

To make dressing, just add
1 T of the mix to
1/4 c. vinegar or lemon juice and
3/4 c. vegetable oil.

For variety, add 1 clove crushed garlic, or 1 T minced fresh herbs (parsley, dill, basil)

Here is her way with this vegetable, now at its most prolific:

ALMOST-INSTANT ZUCCHINI

Shred 1 pound washed zucchini on coarse side of grater. Melt just enough butter to cover bottom of skillet. Saute a little chopped onion until soft. Add zucchini and saute over medium heat, stirring constantly, 1 to 3 min. Sprinkle with salt and pepper. Squash will be crispy and delicious.

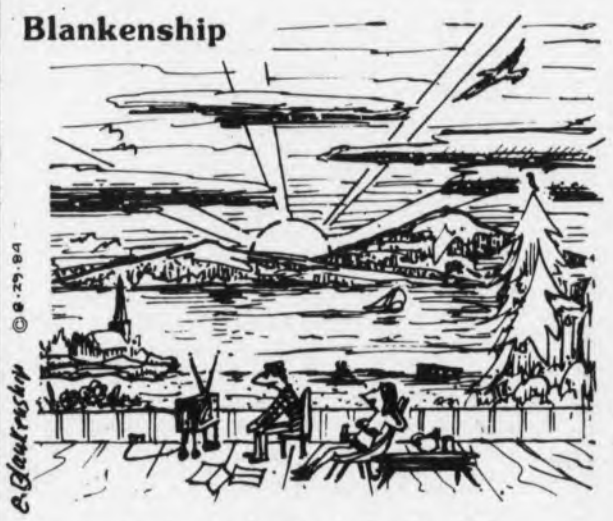
Little known facts about fishing that may save you time and money and fill your fish box on those long summer days and nights are:

A. Big nightcrawlers will catch just as many flounder in deep water as seaworms.

B. Seaworms drifted around bridges on saltwater bays and rivers at night will catch striped bass up to 40 pounds, (just a plain large eight to nine inch seaworm).

C. A chub or a piece of flounder belly, three inches long, one inch wide strip, trolled behind a couple of silver spinner blades on sand flats will catch fluke as big as a welcome mat.

D. A four to six ounce white bucktail jig on a wire line rod with a 15 foot 40 pound monofilament leader jigged fast along the bottom will catch bluefish when almost nothing else works.



E. Turn over a rock in the shallows to find a 1½ to two inch crawfish, hook him in the tail and put a split shot or two 12 inches in front of him and no respectable smallmouth bass will pass up this meal.

F. When fishing for bluefish at night a half of a pogie (herring) will work better than a whole live fish with a single 7/0 hook on a steel leader buried in the chunk of bait fish.

G. A piece of corn on the tip of a hook helps to attract a trout to a nightcrawler in deep water when water is murky and warm.

If just one of these little tricks works for you your day might be improved and your fishing skills increased.

Nostalgia : 'Remembering an education'

When I opened my eyes that snowy morning I heard my father whispering and shaking Mama.

"Mame, it's bitter cold out and the snow is getting deep. You'd better keep the children home from school today. Mame, do you hear me?"

"Yes, George, I'll see to it. I'll get right up."

He kissed her goodbye and left the house.

The next minute she was laughing and poking us and issuing orders.

"Up now! Up you get! This is a school day. A little snow won't hurt you."

When all six of us were bathed and dressed in our long drawers, shirts, Ferris waists, petticoats and school dresses, we were lined up at the kitchen sink. Into each mouth went a spoonful of Scott's Emulsion (a milky mix of cod liver oil) while each little hand held half an orange to suck on quick as a chaser. Small wonder that we seemed immune to colds.

Next came bowls of porridge laced with cream and brown sugar, then steaming cups of a hot liquid made by steeping heaps of cocoa shells in boiling water. It was the poor man's hot chocolate.

To my annoyance I was then clad in an extra pair of long black stockings worn over my oxfords, then rubbers over them. And then SHE tied a green veil of heavy chiffon over my cap and face. I was on my way to first grade.

Guided by my sister Esther, I groped my way down to the school at the corner of our street. It then housed the first three primary grades and this is where we learned to read...the dawn of a lifetime of enormous pleasure.

Papa brought home the "Boston Post" every night and we devoured the funnies. There was "Calamity Jane," a strip I soon became adept at drawing, and another called, "The VanLoons in Society." One evening Mama asked me to read it aloud for her and I said, "The VanLoons in Soshiety." My sisters all screamed and Papa looked puzzled, but I defended my pronunciation with,

"Well, if "s-o-c-i-a-l" is pronounced 'soshul' then why isn't society the same?"

Sounds logical. A wonderful language, isn't it? On Sundays we read the "Boston Globe" with those treasured pages of "The Katzenjammer Kids" and "Billy the Boy Artist." Papa read the news and Mama cut out recipes from Confidential Chat for her scrapbook.

After the third grade I transferred to another school where I skipped a grade and "caught up" with my sister Esther. We walked home from school together until we reached the Library, when my feet pulled me in the direction of the brownstone side entrance to the Children's Room. With a quick "Tell Mama I'm in the Library," I'd spend the afternoon with my favorite characters, Dorothy Dainty and Elsie Dinsmore. I even had a favorite seat over the hot air register, except in the winter you'd have to remember to take of your rubbers.

We soaked up our lessons like little sponges, admired and respected our teachers and regarded with awe our tall, gentle principal, Mr. MacGregor. he looked a lot like Papa.

By 1915, when we were graduated, we knew arithmetic, fractions and percentages, how to parse a sentence, when to use the broad "a," how to spell...shuddered at a double negative and only rarely split an infinitive. In fact, we were a prissy little bunch of purists!

In the eighth grade we acted from memory Act I, Scene I of Julius Caesar. I had the part of Marullus Flavius and can still recite:

"You blocks, you stones, you worse than senseless things! O, you hard hearts, you cruel men of Rome. Knew you not Pompey?"

I loved it. It was theatre.

And we had music. Every week Mr. Whorisky, who was Music Director, taught us to sight read music, to draw the staff, clef and notes, to take our pitch from his tuning fork and to harmonize. I was a soprano, Esther sang alto, and we practiced at home. Mama had a lovely voice and a good ear and she'd grimace if we were even a shade off key. I still remember all the lyrics of those lovely songs.

Our Art Director was Mr. Peter Roos, a round little Dutchman with an impressive Van Dyke. He brought in autumn leaves and branches of wild berries for us to sketch. It was like playtime.

When my oldest sister,Liz, graduated, the exercises were held in the prestigious Memorial Hall. The Mayor's daughter, Leslie Wardwell, was one of her classmates. The elegance of the occasion warranted a train trip from Middleboro by Aunt Stina and Uncle Wallace who arrived with a dozen long-stemmed American beauties for Elizabeth Florence McKay, the sweet girl graduate. Mama made her dress all by hand, with tiny pin tucks and lace insertions.

In contrast was our graduation (Esther's and mine). It was wartime, 1915, and a union graduation was planned with over a thousand graduates. A chorus of 500 young voices sang "Forget-me-not" by Giese and for years later Esther and I would break into song with it. The finale was memorable...a great American flag suspended from the roof was unfurled to shower us with stars and confetti.

During the school months our week days were filled with homework, piano lessons and practice. Saturday mornings were given to dancing lessons and elocution, and maybe on a few Saturday afternoons we could go to the movies and for a nickel see Pearl White in the "Perils of Pauline."

Leslie Messina Field Day draws 94 area golfers

Ninety-four junior golfers from the South Shore Four-Ball League participated in their annual Leslie Messina Field Day at Duxbury Golf Club, Tuesday, Aug. 21.

The junior golfers were from Cohasset, Duxbury, Marshfield, Hingham, Hatherly, North Hull, Pembroke, Plymouth and Scituate. A Florida style match was played, scrambling all the juniors. The day's event included swimming, a video tape of all players, a cookout, a longest drive contest and nearest to the pin.

Many prizes were awarded. The number one foursome was Mark Elberry, Scituate, Derek Shug, Plymouth, Todd Fithian, Hingham, and Rich Blagborough, Marshfield. Mark Elberry had the longest drive with J. Medici of Nort Hull winning nearest to the pin.

The Leslie Messina Field Day annually concludes the junior summer golf for the South Shore League. Marshfield won the League title.

Leslie Messina, who died in an automobile accident in 1982, played golf for Cohasset in this League. Each year the Field Day is played in her memory.

Candidates' corner . . .

Anna Doherty

Stressing the need for a more balanced political system in this state, State Senatorial candidate Anna Doherty urged voters to support the slate of Republican candidates running this year.

Noting that there is a real choice to make in November given the Republican candidates available for office, "the voters have the opportunity to return the two party system to Massachusetts," Doherty said.

She greeted voters at the Marshfield Fair where she opened her booth to all Republican candidates visting the fair.

Visiting the Doherty booth recently were United States Senate candidates Elliot Richardson and Ray Shamie, Tenth Congressional District candidates Lew Crampton and George Donovan, and Sarah Young, the Republican candidate for State Representative from Scituate/Marshfield.

Activities at the fair booth were directed by Dave Roberts, Doherty's Marshfield Campaign Coordinator.

Other Marshfield residents active in the Marshfield organization are Joe Beals, Laura Beck, Otis and Barbara Carney, Blanche Carpenter, Al Cornell, Burton and Roberta Cowan, Edward and Betty Dubois, and Doris and Bob Ewart.

Also serving The Elect Doherty Committee are Dick Hall, Tippy Harrison, Virginia Hart, Bill Hirst, Gail Hirst, Marilyn Howe, Ken Jason, Bob Kirkland, W.E. Read, Sam Spencer, George Shaw, Geraldine Stephens, and Eleanor Thomas.

Richard R. Walsh

Richard R. Walsh, a candidate for state Senate from the Norfolk/Plymouth District, yesterday repeated his pledge to give up his teaching job and make the state Senate "a full time postion."

"If I am elected, I won't have any distractions. I will work fulltime on the job the people elected me to do. Not "fulltime" here and parttime somewhere else." Walsh, who is currently a Weymouth selectman, made those remarks at a coffee hour at the home of Mrs. Catherine Stone (27 Sedgewick Drive, Scituate).

"And my definition of "fulltime" is not 40 or 50 hours a week spent on this job and other hours spent in other renumerative pursuits. I don't think that's what people want or expect in a state Senator today. They want you focusing on this job to the exclusion of all others. For $30,000 a year, travel pay and other prerequisites, I don't believe they are asking too much."

William B. Golden

William B. Golden, state senate candidate for the Norfolk/Plymouth district called for an emergency meeting of the Directors of the South Shore Coalition for Clean Water to organize a citizen's action lobbying campaign to fight growing water pollution on the South Shore.

Citing recent findings of serious pollution in Weymouth, Hull, Hingham, Cohasset, Scituate, Marshfield and Duxbury, Golden is concerned the entire South Shore now shares a common threat to the clean and healthful environment which has traditionally defined the quality of life in our coastal communities.

Golden said "the tragic example of Boston Harbor's pollution should not be ignored by residents of the South Shore. Our South Shore coastal waters, like those in Boston Harbor, can quickly be degraded and destroyed as a recreation resource, and instead become a significant public health risk.

"In recent months, we've experienced discharges of raw sewage and more beach and clamflat closings in Weymouth, Hingham and Hull as a result of overflows from the MDC sewage treatment plant at Nut Island. At the same time, unsafe levels of coliform bacteria have been detected in Cohasset, Scituate and Duxbury Harbors and in the North River. In addition, we've detected a significant PCB spill in the Fore River in Weymouth and TCE contamination in the drinking water in Marshfield.

Plymouth has filed a home rule petition with the legislature for a ten year exemption from the Ocean Sanctuaries Act so that Plymouth can build a larger sewage treatment plant which will discharge ever increasing tons of sewage into a fragile Duxbury Bay."

Golden called for the South Shore to unite immediately in support of a regional action plan to fight water pollution on our coasts and in our bays and rivers.

Golden said "We must unite to lobby Beacon Hill to obtain adequate funding and professional personnel for such state agencies as DEQE. The state's failure, after months of testing, to locate the point sources of pollution on the North River clearly underscores the need to give the state environmental protection agencies the resources available to respond to emergency pollution discharges."

Golden, who worked in Washington D.C. to establish the United States Environmental Protection Agency and founded South Shore Coalition after winning a landmark court order against the MDC to clean up Boston Harbor, announced that the Coalition's fall legislative agenda would be formulated by the Board of Directors in response to these broadbased regional pollution problems.

The Coalition's Board of Directors is composed of Chairman Bill Golden, Chairman of the Hingham Harbor Development Committee and member of the Sargent Committee Nicholas Cockinos, Hull Clam Warden Linda Beres, Weymouth's Board of Health member Maureen Fuschetti and President of 'Save our Shores' Maureen Mazrimus.

"DENTAL FACTS"

The following dental health information is provided by HARBORLIGHT FAMILY DENTAL CARE, member of the American Dental Association and the American Academy of Dental Group Practice.

WHAT IS THE FUTURE OF BONDING? Three very exciting prospective uses for bonding lie on the horizon.

The first involves the ability to attach these space-age materials to the more internal layer of teeth (dentin). Today, we can bond reliably only to the most outer layer, the enamel. This is an exciting prospect because it will allow the dentist to use bonding on teeth in which most or all of the enamel has been lost due to decay.

A second area under research is producing composite resins which are harder and more wear-resistant. Up until now these materials could only be utilized on the non-chewing surfaces of teeth because of the poor ability to resist wearing down. When advances produce a material that is as hard and durable as tooth enamel a multitude of new uses will come about. Beyond this, though, lies the fact that although silver in large bulk actually weakens the tooth, these resins strengthen it.

A third area of research involves the development of so-called "Paint-On" fillings. With the aid of these materials the dentist will apply composite resins with a small paint brush which will be tooth-colored and in liquid form. When set these fillings will serve to mask badly stained teeth and produce a beautiful result.

For further information, contact Harborlight Family Dental Care. Consultations are free of charge.

Japanese Girl Visits

Miss Kyoko Tagata of Hiroshima, Japan spent last Sunday visiting at The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints (Mormon) in Hingham. Kyoko, 22, is on a one month cultural exchange program in the United States and has been staying with the Timothy Lawlor's in Cohasset.

Kyoko was introduced to the Mormon church back in Japan by a young lady missionary from Texas. Although not a member, Kyoko was pleased at the opportunity of seeing the church in Hingham. Tom and Zella Turner and Polly Doggett, of Cohasset, drove her to and from the meetings.

Kyoko attended the sacrament service at 9 a.m., followed by the Gospel Essentials class, and next the women's organization; all three sessions comprise the regular Sunday services.

She was surprised to find programs similar to those she knew in Japan. Only the faces were different. The book she was carrying in her hand became a curiosity with all she met. Not many have seen a Book of Mormon written in Japanese.

State refuses Fed's land offer

By Jane Lane

To the surprise of few, and the dismay of many, the federal government has decided to give only a portion of surplus Hingham land to the state. But the state Department of Environmental Management (DEM) has rejected the offer, saying the remaining 135 acres of former Hingham Ammunition Depot land "consumes the prime upland open space portion of the 767 acre parcel."

The state refused the offer from the federal government for 632-acres of surplus land in Hingham. The refusal was based on the federal government's insistence that the remaining 135 acres in the former Hingham Ammunition Depot be considered for negotiated sale to the Commonwealth, or sold on the open market to a private developer.

Congressman Gerry Studds, who has fought alongside state and local officials to gain control of the vacant parcel, supported the state's ownership rejection. According to Studds' Hanover spokesman, Maureen Guarde, the Congressman agrees that the only correct course is for complete state ownership of the entire 767 acres, through 100 percent public discount benefit, not through a negotiated sale.

Guarde said the Congressman will continue to support the state and local efforts to gain full ownership of the surplus federal land.

State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, representing the district of Hingham, Hull and Cohasset, also supported the state's stand against the land offer. Saying the state should accept only the entire property, Rep. Murray noted, "the land is adjacent to Wompatuck State Park. The 767 acres will be used to expand the present park.

"I have received many calls from my constituents regarding a possible housing development on the acreage you plan to sell. The local officials and my constituents are very disturbed about this issue.The voters of the town of Hingham have approved the zoning of this area as open space/recreational land," she wrote.

Cohasset Water Commissioner William Montuori explained that town's opposition to the private acquisition of the 135-acre parcel. "Currently, the town of Cohasset is involved in an in-depth study of the source of the town's water supply. We are attempting to define the town's watershed district. The water commissioners are very concerned about the type and density of development proposed for land which will be included

Chief devises personnel plan

Captain removal considered

Selectmen will consider the removal of Acting Fire Capt. Richard Conley from that supervisory position at next week's meeting. And in the meantime, a plan has been devised to rotate firefighters as Acting Captains in three-month shifts to fill the vacancy.

The recision of Conley's appointment as Acting Captain in the Cohasset Fire Department comes after the 24-year veteran failed the most recent Civil Service Captain's examination. Three other Cohasset firefighters participated in the test and also failed.

Although Fire Chief Martin Dooley would not comment on his proposed plan, sources say it will include the appointment of acting Captains for three-month periods. The names of the other firefighters who participated in the recent exam, were mentioned as those who would be named interim Acting Captains until a permanent Captain is appointed.

Four Cohasset firefighters failed the most recent Captain's exam. At their meeting last week, selectmen voted 3-2 to open the examination to the public, with preference to be given to Cohasset residents.

According to selectman Frank England, anyone would be allowed to participate in the Civil Service test, and if a local person passed, he would be given preference over a non-resident who may have scored a higher mark.

Selectmen John DeBassio was opposed to the change, along with fellow member Rocco Laugelle. Last week Laugelle commented that because many Cohasset firefighters work second jobs, they do not have adequate time to prepare for an examination. Both men favored leaving the Captain's exam open to Cohasset residents only.

The proposed plan to cover the recision of Conley's position, is aimed at covering all shifts, but will not save the town money, Chief Dooley said. He would not elaborate on the plan until he discussed it with selectmen, but said that according to the firefighters' union provision, there must be one captain per shift.

There are four shifts, and Acting Capt. Conley heads up one of the day shifts. Pending selectmen's approval of the plan, Chief Dooley stated, it will go into effect very soon.

Selectmen were scheduled last week to rescind Acting Capt. Conley's appointment; but they delayed the vote until he could come before the board. They also had tenatively scheduled the matter this week, but it has been further rescheduled for next Wednesday's agenda.

At last week's meeting, selectman England objected to the removal until Conley could be notified in person of the pending action. Although the Acting Captain does not legally have to be notified of such an action, selectmen felt it was the proper route to follow.

Conley, selectmen and the fire chief have been at odds throughout most of the past year and a half. Just two weeks ago, the latest confrontation occurred between Conley and selectmen.

After a public selectmen's session, Conley accused Executive Secretary Mark Lanza of disposing of a Step Two grievance he had filed against Chief Dooley. Lanza

Acid rain project honored

The Cohasset Water Department received a commendation from Governor Michael Dukakis last week for its assistance in a study to determine the impact of acid rain in Massachusetts.

Under the supervision of Benjamin Curley, the Water Dept. helped to analyze water samples from Milton, Weymouth, Braintree, Quincy and Cohasset. Because Cohasset is one of the few water departments with a state-registered laboratory, their facilities and personnel were recruited for the six-month program.

Curley explained that a staff of four assisted in the project under the direction of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst. Joe Hamilton and Bill McAuliffe supervised the lab work, with the assistance of plant operators Lee Andrews and Denise Parsole.

The Cohasset Water Commission was supportive of the department's participation, Curley added, which included analyzing water samples for acidity caused by rainfall.

Curley explained that the effects of acid rain are being studied in the Northeast. Drinking water must be a certain pH level, he said, and thus chemicals are added to the water to attain a neutral pH balance.

If water is too acidic, marine life, a natural portion of the water substance, will not survive. Human consumption of water must be between a pH level of 7.0 and 7.5.

According to the Water Department supervisor, Cohasset water samples proved the town's supply "is in very good shape.

"Our water quality is very good," Curley added. "The acid rain problem in this area, we found through these tests, is very slight. The acidity levels in the South Shore area are very normal. But no one knows what will happen in the future."

He noted that acid rain is a large environmental concern in northern Maine and New York state.

"In this area, we're not bothered by acid rain to a great extent. But who knows what will happen in the future," he said. The results of this monitoring program were aimed at determining methods to combat the effects of acid rain on water supplies throughout the state.

Cohasset's week . . .

Yankee to request dock

The corporate headquarters of Yankee Oil and Gas Co., located in the former mansion of the late Jessie Cox, may request permission to build a dock into Cohasset Harbor.

According to Harbor Study Committee chairman Charles Fink, the company is considering the construction of a dock long enough to accomodate a 70-foot yacht. The dock may be located off the shore nearest the Cohasset Yacht Club, although no precise location has been discussed.

Selectmen will have final jurisdiction over whether the dock may be built, and the Harbor Study Committee will likely provide some input and research into that final decision.

Annoying phone callers

Following numerous crank phone calls made to residents the past few weeks, police have urged anyone receiving such a call to contact the police station.

During the past few weeks, many people have called police to complain about receiving anonymous calls from someone asking questions about sex, alcohol or drugs. Usually following the brief discussion, the anonymous caller asks for a date.

Police said the more information they obtain from residents who have received such calls, the quicker an arrest can be made.

Although the caller sometimes identifies himself as a local police officer, doctor, or school official, police said the identification is a hoak.

Crank phone calls are not an unusual occurrence, police said. But the number and similarity of the calls have increased to the extent that police now believe one caller is involved. Anyone with any information about the phone calls should contact police.

"Pool Day" at the town pool was a splashing success last week. Andy Keim was one of the more buoyant participants. (Bill Quigley)

Reduced water main project

The water commission decided last week that because of a shortage of state and local funds, the proposed water main replacement project will have to be reduced.

Although the project was originally to have included replacement of water mains on Border Street from Summer Street to the Scituate line, the commission voted last week to reduce the Border Street work by 900 feet to the Scituate connection.

According to Water Commissioner Peter Pratt, the most vital section of Border Street, where water pressure is the worst, will still be included in the project.

Geneva Construction Co. of Braintree was the low bidder on the water main project, with a total price of $348,886. But state and local appropriations were short by about $80,000.

The commission also decided last week to request that selectmen order American Cablesytems to move its underground cables on Jerusalem Road. According to the commissioners, the underground cable, which was specified in the contract negotiated between the town and the cable company, lies directly atop the water mains.

According to Pratt, if a main ever broke or had to be replaced as scheduled next month, that cable conduit would also have to be ripped out. Residents in that area would be then be denied cable service, he explained. According to Highway Surveyor Harold Litchfield, between 500 and 1000 feet of cable will have to be relocated along Jerusalem Road.

Library reading program party

"Go for the Gold" the summer reading program at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, concluded with a golden gala of games, refreshments and crafts to honor the Cohasset youngsters who participated on Thursday, Aug. 23 at the Unitarian Parish House.

One hundred twenty children took part reading approximately 2350 books. Sixty-seven of these youngsters read more than 20 books each. Most of the students entered their book titles into a computer, which was loaned to the children's department by the Cohasset schools. These readers enjoyed the hands-on opportunity of working with the computer which was for some was an introductory experience and for others provided reinforcement of school skills. Each reader was provided with a print-out of the titles s/he had read over the summer.

As part of the party fun, Nancy Connolly,a Cohasset artist, assisted the children in making clay Olympic medals and other things from clay. Other marathon games included a ring-toss and a gold coin guessing game. Jane Goedecke, president of the Friends of the Library which sponsored the program, coordinated the party with Cissie Cullivan and other Friends of the Library members.

Students who read twenty books or more were awarded a paper back book of their choice as a gift of the Friends. Those who earned a book: in the watershed district. This is a major source of concern for all our water commissioners," he stated.

In a letter dated August 24 to the federal National Park Service, DEM Commissioner James Gutensohn said the GSA land offer does not coincide with the application DEM submitted in February, and the proposal "is clearly not in keeping with the character of that area."

According to the state commissioner, "there is an increasing need for more public open space in this densely populated suburban section of the Commonwealth. Once the 135 acres of undeveloped public upland is removed for another use, the open space value of the remaining 632 acres is markedly diminished."

The ammunition land is a vacant parcel located between Wompatuck State Park and Whitney Woods. It was last used by Army reserve units in 1982, and as an ammunition depot in 1962. The streams and swamps which are abundant throughout the parcel, eventually lead to Lily Pond, Cohasset's main water supply.

The state had planned to connect the depot property to the rest of Wompatuck with a single access road, rather than constructing a second entrance. That proposal pleased Wompatuck State Park officials in Cohasset and in Scituate, who are concerned about the probability of traffic congestion along Route 3A if a second entrance is developed.

According to DEM Commissioner Gutensohn, "Wompatuck State Park represents a model of rededication of public land for use consistent with current documented public needs. The obvious long-term objective of federal, state and local officials when Wompatuck was established was that the military reserve would become a part of the Park when it no longer served a military function."

Commissioner Gutensohn requested the federal government reconsider the application for the surplus acreage at 100 percent discount, "and allow DEM to better satisfy its mission of providing open space/recreational opportunities to all citizens."

GRAZ, AUSTRIA

Graz could easily be nicknamed Austria's "forgotten city." It is generally overlooked by visitors who flock to Vienna, Salzburg, Innsbruck and the famed Alpine resorts. Yet, this seeming lack of attraction is part of the city's charm. Here, the Old World lives on in a way that has long since gone out of style in other parts of the Continent. It is as though the Vienna of a century ago had been preserved in all its purity. What is more, Graz qualifies as one of Europe's foremost walking cities. The city tourist office issues a free folder detailing a self-guided walking tour. What better way to experience Old World grace than leisurely strolling? If you visit Vienna, consider extending the trip to Graz.

Channel problems outlined to town officials

A Whitehead Road resident has alerted town officials about the "impending danger" caused by constant boating violations in Cohasset Channel.

Susan McVeigh, whose home overlooks the channel, informed selectmen and the harbormaster last week that lack of law enforcement within the harbor may someday result in another tragedy similar to one which occurred this summer. In her letter addressed to selectmen, the harbormaster and the sailing and yacht clubs. McVeigh listed numerous safety violations within Cohasset Harbor.

McVeigh said she composed a similar letter in 1976, but received no response from town officials. "The situation is becoming of increasing concern to me and others who view the impending danger," she warned in her correspondence.

Harbormaster Harry Ritter agreed with the sentiments expressed by McVeigh, but said there is little he can do without the adequate assistance he has requested annually from the town.

"It's strictly a matter of manpower," he replied. "There are so many areas in this harbor to cover, and I can't do an adequate job patroling the harbor and being in the office at the same time."

Among the violations cited by McVeigh are the disappearance of the posted speed sign in the channel. She also noted that boats should be traveling 4 m.p.h. there, but are often seen at speeds far in excess of that limit. "The speed limit is either not known or ignored by many pleasure boats," she wrote.

Ritter, who has been Cohasset Harbormaster for the past 19 years, agreed there are many speeding violations within the channel, but added that posting a sign is a meaningless task. "As soon as we put the sign up, the kids take it down. It's useless," he acknowledged.

According to the harbormaster, the boating and safety problems in Cohasset Harbor "are strictly a matter of enforcement." And due to a shortage of funds, he added, that enforcement is inadequate.

Ritter said he has enough money to hire an additional patrol for the odd day each weekend. That is the day when waterskiing within the harbor is prohibited.

Although he has continually requested additional manpower each year, his pleas have been denied by town officials, Ritter said. Currently, he patrols the water five days a week, with the assistance added to the odd weekend day patrol. Ideally, Ritter said, he would like enough help to have someone in the Harbormaster's office, and a patrol out in the water seven days a week.

"As it stands right now, when I am in the office and no one is out in the harbor, I have to rely on someone calling in a complaint to me. And the only way I can act on a complaint is for that person to get the boat's registration number," he added.

McVeigh, who has a bird's eye view of the channel waters from her home, said that every year the violations increase. The speeding boats and the waterskiers who blatantly ignore the town bylaw, have been continuing to the point where she can't ignore it.

"Especially on the weekends, there's tons of boats in the channel, and it appears it's time once again to alert the town that these boats are violating the law and something is going to occur in this dangerous situation," she warned.

"Small boats, swimmer and children's programs are all in danger due to speeding boats and irresponsible water skiing activity in the channel," she added. McVeigh said she felt it was time to issue another stern warning to officials, to ward off "another tragedy in our waters."

The tragedy McVeigh referred to was the death earlier this summer of a Medfield man who was killed when he fell off a motorboat off Bassing Beach. The 20-year man was sitting at the bow of a boat that was pulling a waterskiier, when it veered sharply and he fell from the vessel and was hit with the motor's propeller.

Ritter was sympathetic to the concerns raised by McVeigh, but reiterated that without funding, the harbormaster's office can not adequately patrol the channel and the harbor waters. It's a question, he said, of returning again this year to the advisory committee and selectmen, and requesting the additional appropriations.

McVeigh also suggested that personnel from the sailing and yacht clubs be included in any proposed changes in the enforcement of safety laws. "I would like the appropriate people responsible for safety in the channel to consider authorizing the Sailing Club and Yacht Club launches and teaching personnel to issue warnings or to report violations to the habormaster or to have more frequent patrols by the harbormaster boat itself," McVeigh stated.

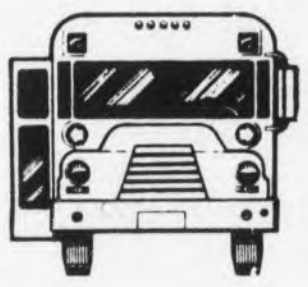
Cohasset League sponsors debate

Leagues of Women Voters from several South Shore towns are sponsoring a candidates debate for the 10th Congressional District which will focus on national and global security issues.

The debate, sponsored by Cohasset, Hingham, Marshfield-Duxbury and Scituate, is part of a nationwide project — "Agenda for Security: Election '84."

The group's aim is to foster informed discussion and highlight candidate positions on foreign policy and national security issues.

During September and October more than 90 state and local Leagues will sponsor debates involving nearly one-half of the Senate races and about one-fifth of the House races.



"This is a unique effort to stimulate grassroots discussion of a subject all across the nation," said Sandra Cleary of Hingham, local project manager. She added that Leagues are coordinating "Agenda for Security" debates in many important races.

The first debate will be held Friday, Sept. 7, at 7:30 at the Scituate Town Library on Branch Street.

All congressional candidates will speak.

Another 10th Congressional District Debate will be held Thursday, Oct. 18, at 8 p.m. in the Central Junior High School auditorium in Hingham.

Since the House deals with a number of bills every year that set U..S. weapons and trade policies and affect U..S. relations with other countries, the candidates will be questioned on such areas as: strategic weapons and arms control, U.S. role in Central and South America, U.S. trade policies, U.S. participation in the United Nations and international debt.

Cherry sheet increases

Cohasset will receive $20,000 this fiscal year in additional local aid from the state.

Original estimates of the state's local aid funding were issued in March. The appropriations at that time totaled $1,493,265. The revised figures, which are the result of a statewide additional direct local aid package totaling $53.1 million, will mean $19,624 more in local aid to Cohasset.

The state issued the revised cherry sheet figures last month, with instructions to the municipalities to amend their Fiscal Year state appropriations.

According to the state, a community may use the increased aid by funneling it into a stabilization fund or replacing funds from the Free Cash account. Cohasset's Free Cash account was also listed this week as totaling $606,210.

School appointments

In what must have been an all-time record for the shortest Cohasset School Committee meeting, that group met Wednesday morning for about five minutes to approve five staff appointments.

Two committee members were not present, Martha Gjesteby who had a previous committment, and Jack Langmaid who is hospitalized this week.

All appointments were approved by a 3-0 vote. No background on the staff appointees were provided to the press during the meeting. The following persons were appointed by the committee:

Richard M. Izzo, junior/senior high school science teacher. The committee's previous choice made two weeks ago did not accept the position.

Rosalie Collins, elementary teacher, Joseph Osgood School.

Murrel Culpepper, J.V. girls' soccer coach.

Karen Kirkendall, girls' junior high soccer coach.

George Marlette III, boys' junior high soccer coach.

There was no discussion regarding any of the appointments.

Change of meeting

The regular meeting of the Board of Selectmen scheduled for Wednesday, September 19 at 7:30 p.m. will be held Thursday, September 20 at 7:30 p.m.

Effective October 1, the Board of Selectmen will change its regular meeting night from Wednesday to Monday at 7:30 p.m.

Medical services committee

Selectmen last week made appointments to the Emergency Medical Services Advisory Committee for one year. Although the fire department EMT's had strongly opposed the creation of the committee, selectmen said the group was necessary to inform the board on ways in which the EMT service can be upgraded and improved.

The following persons volunteered their services to the advisory committee and were appointed: Dr. Barabar O'Pray, Dr. Mark Friedman, Dr. Wayne DeWard, and registered nurse Carol Barrett.

Hazardous collection day

Summer is nearly over and it's time to clean out your cellar and garage of hazardous materials. The Hazardous Material Advisory Committee has arranged for SCA Chemical Services to be at the town hall parking lot on Highland Street, Saturday, Sept. 22, starting at 8:30 a.m. to collect household hazardous materials from the residents of Cohasset.

SCA is a firm licensed by the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), and the State of Massachusetts to collect, transport, and dispose of hazardous materials. SCA will also accept full liability for the material collected, therefore only households may bring materials. Commercial establishments will not be permitted to dispose of materials at this collection day.

Hazardous materials are any material that is toxic, flammable, corrosive, or chemically reactive. To identify common household hazardous materials look for the words: combustible, flammable, caution, harmful, poison, or dangerous on the label, then bring that material to the collection site. These types of materials include: oil-based paints, solvents, thinners, pool chemicals, pesticides, chemistry sets, and many others. If you are not sure if it is hazardhous, call the Health Agent, or bring it to the collection site.

At the annual town meeting last April, 1500 dollars was appropriated to fund this collection day. The Hazardous Material Advisory Committee is also soliciting contributions from local businesses and fourteen national producers of hazardous materials that are sold for household use.

Hazardous Material Advisory Committee Chairman Jeff Bettinger said, "So far we have collected contributions from two local businesses. We hope that others will also send in a contribution and insure that we can accept all of the material that is brought in. The collection will start at 8:30 a.m. and continue until 2:30 p.m. or our funds exhausted. At that time SCA will not accept any more material. I intend to bring my material to the collection site early and would recommend that others do the same."

If you have any questions about hazardous materials, the collection day, or would like to work with the Hazardous Material Advisory Committee, please contact the Board of Health, or a member of the Committee. We're in the book.

Cohasset Troop 28

The traditional annual cookout and softball game between Troop 28 and the Cohasset Rotarians were held on August 27 at the Barnes Field. The main "Chefs" were Lloyd Prescott and Martin Dooley (Cohasset's Firechief). Everyone had fun during the game but the score mounted so high the final scoring was forgotten. Can you guess who won?

Arthue Lehr, District Explorer Commissioner, and Merle Brown, Scoutmaster of Troop 28, presented John Burns, Rotary Club President,with a plaque from the Old Colony Council. It was in recognition of the Rotary Club's years of support for scouting.

☐ Hope that the Rotary Club has been successful in finding a home for a Japanese student this year. A host family will be needed for three months during the coming school year, as the students will be attending Cohasset High School as a part of the Rotary International Student Foreign Exchange program (as was reported earlier, Lisa Cuff is attending school in Japan this year in return). If you are interested in serving as host, contact Ralph Harrison at 383-0100.

☐ Talk about dedication, Rich Evans actually asked to be allowed to attend double sessions this week to get himself in top-notch shape for his return to college and the hockey schedule. That's a lot of work!

☐ The Wah Lum Kung Fu Academy is now located in Jonathan Livingston Square, with classes scheduled for both morning and afternoon. For details, contact P. Chan Loupos at 383-6822.

☐ Red Gate Lane bids a fond farewell to the old and a welcome to the new! The Sullivan family left last month to make their new residence on Nichols Road and the Bonner family moved in this weekend. Welcome.

☐ It was a sad Monday for Cohasset last Monday . . . .Jim and Kay and all of the "little" McNeills moved to New Hampshire. They are going to live in Hudson, which is a small town much like Cohasset. I'm sure they will take the town by storm; they're a great family! There isn't enough room to list all of the good things they did for our town, they will surely be missed.

☐ Tony Fasiano is the only gardener that we have heard all over town talking about his grand tomato crop! Most seem to have had a bad year, even the big farmers selling to markets, so Tony, we congratulate you.

☐ Jennifer Egan leaves for college this week, and moved a lot of her things to her new "pad" last week. While moving she was still trying to earn an "A" in physical education from her teacher, and she finally got it after one great somersault!

A penny for the thoughts of Linda Holway as she participates in a playground game. (Rose Cundari)

☐ Peg Litchfield called with the news we have been waiting for last week. Peg's mother Pat is going to finally make her television debut on the Wheel of Fortune, which she taped last summer. It will be held Sept. 11 on channel 7 at 5:30; it will also be seen out of a Providence station, channel 12,at 7:30. Should be a lot of fun to watch; don't miss the date or the times.

☐ Welcome home to Vicki Spooner, Jim Martin and John Froio, three Cohasset High students who are AFS members and spent their summers away: Vicki spent time in Brazil, Jim was in Chile and John was in Portugal. All three report having a grand time, what an experience for them!

☐ While on the subject of AFS, more news . . . .Heromi, the 1982 AFS student who graduated in 1982, visited the Spooner family for the summer. And, we have a new AFS student that will be spending the school year here, from Honduras. The student, whom I am sure you will be hearing more about, will be staying with the Rossi family on Main Street.

☐ Plan on attending the South Shore Art Center's "Great Barn Sale" to be held on Saturday, Sept. 15 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. in the Center's Barn. Proceeds go the MacIvor-Reddie Scholarship which is an annual scholarship awarded to a graduating senior. If you are interested in donating an item, drop them off by Sept. 14.

☐ Bob Protulis' family really surprised him last Saturday night, when they held a surprise 30th birthday party for him at the Legion. Fifty people were on hand for the gala celebration, including Bill Woomer who came from Maine with his son Scott for the event. A super time was had by all, and the surprise was a true one.

☐ Don't forget the Soccer Boosters annual pancake breakfast that will be this Saturday (Sept. 9) at the Deer Hill School. Held from 8 a.m. to 1 p.m., it is an occasion not to be missed . . . .anyone who went last year will tell you that! The cooks are experienced (soccer moms) the ticket salespeople are great (anyone on the soccer teams has tickets, or they will be on sale at the door) and the proceeds are going to purchase some sweat suits for the soccer teams. Don't miss it.

☐ Thomas Goyette, of Cohasset was named to the Dean's List at Bridgewater College for the academic year of 1983-84.

☐ That's the news for this week . . . .keep it coming!

Captain decision told Conley he never received the grievance and a heated argument occurred between the two men.

Conley filed a grievance after the chief filed two letters of reprimand in the Acting Captain's personnel file. The first was issued after Conley spoke out in a public meeting against the proposed EMT advisory committee, and the second followed a mistake Conley made in computing the department's weekly payroll.

Lanza alleged that the Step One grievance filed by Conley was invalid because he never stated Dooley's actions were a violation of contract provisions. He gave the grievance back to Conley. The Acting Captain then said he filed a Step Two grievance, but Lanza said his office never received such information.

A farewell

The day on which this newspaper is published coincides with the day the selectmen's Executive Secretary will be leaving for his new job in Westwood.

We want to express publicly our regret that he is concluding his duties in Cohasset, and our sincere hope that he continues to succeed in his career goals.

Mark Lanza is a very career-oriented young man. Perhaps we shouldn't describe him as a young man, a term he always frowned upon. Mark is much wiser than his years, and often felt his elders looked down upon him because of his comparative youth.

We think he is a bit too sensitive of that issue. Anyone who has followed Cohasset's town affairs for the last two years, realizes the choice of Mark Lanza as our Executive Secretary was a very wise selection.

We doubt selectmen could ever better the choice the former three-member board made almost two years ago. As reporters covering the nightly interviews of prospective candidates, all along we agreed that Mark was the only available option. We were happy selectmen saw it that way.

Right from the start, Mark made it clear to the press that he would treat us fairly, as long as we did the same. We began on a common ground, and it was easy to go along from there.

He was not always an easy interview. Attempting to get Mark to spill his guts was no simple task. He never did. His duties and allegiance to the Board of Selectmen, whoever they happened to be, precluded his giving away "scoops" to any reporter crowding his office.

He was always courteous, helpful, resourceful and he refused to give away any information to the vultures we journalists can at times be fairly compared to.

We wonder who will replace him. That will be the difficult task presented to selectmen in the next few months. Mark came into a town office that had not kept up with modern times. Through his efforts, the office functions more efficiently for the good of the community, than it ever did in past years. Mark knew that historic Cohasset would have to enter the modern age, despite our continual affection for things antique.

Some have accused Mark of having an enlarged ego, and he would be the first to admit they may be right. But that was part of his charm, and whatever ego he carried with him, was a deserved addition to his personality.

Mark has worked hard, strived toward goals few attempt. Cohasset should always be proud that we were among the first to "discover" this talented man.

He is directing himself toward a very successful life. Good luck, Mark.

Fears of the first big day

By Claire McDonough

This is the week.

For parents throughout the area there is unalloyed rejoicing. Children who have spent the past few months moaning that "there's nothing to do" can, before they find something to do that may attract the notice of the local police, be bathed, shampooed, garbed in new clothing, and piled into a big yellow school bus.

For most children, though they would deny it with their last breaths, it's a great time. The summer days that stretched so invitingly ahead in June have begun to pall. Leisure is only valued when it relieves tedium, and youngsters have grown restless.

They welcome the opportunity to buy new clothes, and they look forward to seeing their friends, and embarking on another school year which promises to mix the reassuringly familiar with the enticingly unknown

There is, however, one group that contemplates the first day of school with excitement that is not unmixed with terror. I refer, of course, to those for whom it is the first day of school.

"What were you most afraid of, the first time you went to school?" I asked some children — several of them mine — who are now veterans of September openings.

Even the most self-assured among them could recall sheer panic.

Patrick looked at me accusingly. "I was afraid the kids would laugh at the awful paisley shirt you made me wear."

Twenty-two years old, and he can still recall that shirt as if it was yesterday.

Another son turned pale at the memory of the big yellow school bus.

"I was afraid the bus driver wouldn't know how to drive, and we'd have an accident, and we'd all be killed. And if that didn't happen, I was afraid the breakfast you made me eat would make me be sick, and I'd throw up on the big yellow school bus."

His girlfriend, a grown-up young lady with a sophisticated hair style, had some serious memories.

"I was afraid I'd fail. Five years old, starting kindergarten, and I was afraid I'd fail. And I kept thinking, 'What if I don't make any friends? What if everybody hates me?' "

Kevin, now a married man and pillar of the community, confessed it wasn't the first day of classes that terrified him. It was the entrance exam he had taken toward the end of summer.

"You had a new baby," he recalled, "so you couldn't bring me. We were still in Dorchester, and the kids all went to St. Mark's School. You had Eileen bring me, and she took me to the wrong room, and all the other kids there were girls, and everybody laughed. They gave me the test there, anyway, and I was miserable, and I knew I would flunk it.

"Then before school opened we moved to Scituate, and I thought it was because I flunked the test and they wouldn't let me into St. Mark's and we had to move and find a school where they didn't know me."

Other admissions followed.

"I was afraid I'd have to go to the bathroom, and I wouldn't know where it was, and I wouldn't know how to ask, and I might have an accident."

"What if I got on the wrong bus?"

"I was afraid I'd cry, and everyone would make fun of me."

The Dragon turned to me.

"You always said you couldn't wait for each kid to start school. Was it unmixed joy? Was there anything you worried about?"

I nodded.

"I was afraid I had bought the wrong clothes and the other kids would laugh at them. I was afraid the school bus might have an accident. I was afraid one of the kids might throw up on the school bus. I was afraid they wouldn't make friends. I was afraid they'd have to go to the bathroom and they wouldn't know where it was, and they wouldn't know how to ask, and they might have an accident. I was afraid they'd cry and everyone would make fun of them.

"I was afraid they'd be afraid."

World of Weather

By Warren Waitkus

In 1943, U.S. Army Colonel Joseph P. Duckworth, with Lieutenant Ralph O'Hair as navigator, made the first intentional aircraft flight into the eye of a hurricane. Thus, initiating what is now a routine procedure for determining the exact position, and direction of travel, of nature's most awesome force of death and destruction.

The data obtained by reconnaisance aircraft, radar, weather satellite and computer analysis, provides the meteorologists of today with an armory of technical weaponry with which to wage war on nature, and win. Win in the sense, that nowadays a hurricane will not roar in unheralded on an unsuspecting populace.

This was not the case in September, 1938. For at 8:30 a.m., the morning of the 21st, a hurricane, unnamed and of unknown intensity, was moving northward over the turbulent waters east of Cape Hatteras, North Carolina. Soon, this meteorological monster would become the greatest single event to occur in New England's weather history.

Forecasters of the time felt that the storm would recurve to the northeast and pass harmlessly into the central North Atlantic east of Cape Cod, leaving the mainland unscathed. Usually a hurricane howling its way from the West Indies would at first move slowly westward while increasing in strength. As these storms reach the northern latitudes, they normally curve to the north, then to the northeast, and vanish out to sea.

New England might have been forewarned had weathermen been able to predict the storm's track as the result of past experience. But the last hurricane to strike New England was on September 23, 1815, and surely no living person recalled that.

Also, unfortunately, the movement of a tropical cyclone is often erratic, and this brute continued on an almost northward course, following a low pressure trough as a path of least resistance. Two areas of high pressure had developed, one over the Middle Atlantic states, the other over the Atlantic Ocean. Between the two areas was a Valley of Death, cutting into the heart of New England.

As the disturbance approached the Carolinas it's rate of forward speed was about 12 miles an hour. As it passed Cape Hatteras it's rate of speed, characteristically, advanced to 32 miles an hour. But suddenly, unbeknownst to weathermen, the forward motion accelerated to 56 miles per hour, closing the gap to landfall at an alarming rate. By early afternoon the great storm was located south of Long Island, N.Y., its eye lurking behind an umbrella black sky.

In the eye, or center of a hurricane, where atmospheric pressure is lowest, a calm area exists. There are bursts of blue sky and sunlight, with relatively calm seas.

Around the eye circulates a maelstrom of violence, created in the ocean regions known as the doldrums. Hot, moist air is forced upward by cooler dry air, and a rotary motion is imparted to the mass. Winds start to spiral inwardly in a counter-clockwise direction. The winds are often greater than 75 mph covering an area 100 miles in diameter, with gale force winds extending outward 400 miles.

At about 3:00 p.m. on Wednesday the 21st, the hurricane slammed ashore near Patchogue, Long Island. It moved inland, then across Long Island Sound and roared northward into Connecticut. At 5:00 p.m., the center was located over Massachusetts as the storm track began to veer to the north-northwest and then turned northwest into Quebec Province, Canada.

The storm's passage over land covered 260 miles. The frictional effects and lack of energy from the sea finally dissipated the deadly cyclone somewhere over the Sub-Arctic wastes. The wake of death and devastation left behind by this berserk quirk of Mother Nature was catastrophic. Never before had such distress and destruction been visited upon so large an area of New England as occurred during this hurricane.

As the storm struck with it's fullest force, the tide was rising to its peak — a tide that was the highest of the year. The hurricane drove the sea before it, and as the water hit the shallows of the Continental Shelf, spectacular breakers formed. Some as high as 40 feet crashed onto the beaches with terrific force, sweeping all before it.

The foaming fury poured into the inlets of the Thames River in Connecticut, Narragansett Bay, the Acushnet and Taunton Rivers and Buzzards Bay. Flood water in downtown Providence, R.I. reached the roofs of stalled trolley cars. New London, Conn. was left a mass of twisted steel and rubble. On Cape Cod, whole clusters of summer homes were swept away. Destruction on the Cape might have reached immense proportions had not the Cape Cod Canal been able to take the push of the storm surge and carry the flood tide into Cape Cod Bay.

Inland the wind wreaked havoc with buildings, uprooted thousands of trees and downed power and telephone lines. Factories and mills were destroyed, and business districts inundated. But a disaster should not be measured by material losses alone, no matter how great. The human suffering takes precedence, and the death toll in this great hurricane was appalling.

Westport, Mass. led the list with 22 dead. The death list in other communities included New Bedford, 12; Buzzards Bay, 9; Mattapoisett, 8; Little Compton, 6; Woods Hole, 6; Fairhaven, 6; Falmouth, 5; Vineyard Haven, 4; Nantucket, 1; Tiverton, 1; Pocasset, 1; and Dartmouth, 1. The exact figures for the loss of life in New England will never be known, but contemporary figures place the dead at 600.

On that disastrous night, as the wind buffeted the shuttered windows of our darkened home in Bridgewater, I remember my father saying in his native Lithuanian: "Mano Dievas, Mano Dievas," "My God; My God."

AUGUST SUMMARY

If you liked the first half of August you would love the Everglades Swamp. It was hot, humid, hazy and heavy fog prevailed for eight days in a row, from the 8th-15th. There were no major storms but we did have an abundance of drizzle and some shower activity. Precipitation varied depending on where you were. Some areas had heavy downpours while others experienced only sprinkles. It was an unsettled month overall, cloudy, but with less rainfall than normal.

Total precipitation for August, at my station in Marshfield, was 1.12 inches, 3.22 inches below normal. The maximum 24-hour precipitation was .53 inches on the 13th, rain, .01 inch or more, occurred on eight days with a trace on one day. This was the first month in the past year that we had below normal precipitation. Total precipitation this year has been 39.92 inches, 11.75 inches above normal.

Murray's memos

Report from the State House

By Mary Jeanette Murray

Quality education is certainly on our minds lately due to President Reagan's cry of the "rising tide of mediocrity" in American schools and, of course, House Bill 5704, the Governor's major education package.

Most everyone feels that the quality of teachers in our public schools is declining. The average SAT scores of education majors are lower than those for most other majors and are on the decline. There is a substantial and growing shortage of teachers in the areas of math and science. Many believe that we lose the best teachers in these areas to industry. All this, despite the benefits the teaching profession offers, such as tenure and a nine-month work year.

Interestingly enough, the problems experienced by the teaching profession are not unique; the nursing profession complains of almost exactly the same plight. Teachers (and nurses) want to be considered as "professionals." They want more status, respect and better working conditions. These are the factors that determine the attractiveness of the job. Salary does have an effect somewhat on the views of the society at large.

The legislature cannot change local practices in most cases, nor can it change the way the public views teachers. Therefore, the crux of the teaching profession's problems lies outside the reach of the legislature.

BUT WHAT CAN THE LEGISLATURE DO?

Research has shown that teachers like the job best, and do the best job, when they are allowed to exercise professional judgment and choice in matters such as choosing curriculum materials and teaching/learning strategies. This is really not surprising. It falls directly in line with a basic tenet of management — employees produce more and the morale is higher when they are given a say in the management/control of the project they are working on.

House 5704, therefore, is on the wrong track. In this bill, the Governor is taking teachers' power and school committees' power away and gives it to the state — the Dept. of Education. It's the state takeover of education.

House 5704 is in the House Ways and Means Committee where it is now undergoing about its fourth redraft. It is expected to be taken up by the legislature this Fall. A state takeover of education is definitely uncalled for. House 5704 is far from the answer to Massachusetts' education needs. Amend, amend.

10th Congressional Candidates

Peter Flynn

Peter Y. Flynn, 44, the incumbent sheriff of Plymouth County, announced his candidacy for the 10th Congressional District early this spring, opposing Rep. Gerry Studds (D-Cohasset) and candidate Christopher Trundy in the Sept. 18 primary.

He holds a bachelor's degree in education from Bridgewater State College (1961) and a master's degree in criminal justice and human services from Boston University's School of Education (1979).

Flynn, a Bridgewater native, has taught school and worked as a dairy sales manager before being elected representative of the 8th Plymouth District in 1973. He served eight years in the house and chaired the Joint Committee on Public Safety and the Emission Control Commission while there. He was vice chairman of the Ethics Committee and chaired several special panels, including the Furlough Study Commission, the Committee on Violence in the Massachusetts prison system, and various juvenile crime prevention programs.

In 1980 he was elected sheriff of Plymouth County, overseeing the Plymouth County House of Correction and the sheriff's staff.

Flynn has emphasized local problems in his campaign this summer, with an emphasis toward helping the business climate in the Commonwealth. He has issued position papers that support tax credit legislation for high technology companies involved in extensive research and development and a proposal that would allow private industry to become more actively involved in the development of outer space. Both measures, he says, would help the state economy and the state's residents.

In recent debates, he has not shied away from confronting incumbent Studds with questions about last summer's House censure that resulted from an investigation of allegations of homosexual activity between members of Congress and Congressional pages.

In some areas, he is considered a conservative, opposing abortion measures and gun control legislation and favoring the death penalty.

Some of his stands agree with those of the incumbent, but he would do more. For instance, while he agrees that Studds has fought for the Coast Guard and its funding, "it was just to keep the budget above water." Flynn would propose taking the Coast Guard out of the Department of Transportation and restoring it to the Department of Defense, where, he thinks,it would have a better chance of getting increased funding for its increased responsibilities, particularly in the area of drug-smuggling.

Flynn sees a need for a strong voice for the entire South Shore and Cape area, the Congressional district as a whole. The ongoing Southeast Expressway reconstruction is one such area, he says, where a Congressman can have an overall voice that carries to Washington.

He is not in favor of cutting social programs, having seen, he says, too many inmates at his facility who "started out life with too little chance, with bad home situations, malnourishment and so forth." He strongly opposes the cutting of the so-called WICs program, federal funding for women, infants and children.

Flynn is married to the former Nancy Hart of Fall River, a school teacher for the past 16 years. Daughter Beth is a sophomore at Cornell University's College of Industrial and Labor Relations. Son Peter Jr. is a senior in high school. The Flynns live in the sheriff's residence on the grounds of the House of Correction in Plymouth.

Gerry Studds

From all accounts, this has been the most brash, hard-fought campaign in Gerry Studds' illuminous political career.

Name-calling and hard-hitting accusations have been flying freely throughout the past months, as Studds attempts to overcome last year's censure by the United States Congress and focus in on substantive issues.

In previous interviews with the Mariner it is clear Studds would like his fight for re-election to remain free of the homosexuality issue, and proceed to legislation and events directly affecting the district he has represented for the past eleven years.

A Cohasset native, whose family members still reside there, Studds now lives in Provincetown. Historically, Studds has been an overwhelmingly popular politician amidst a sea of conservative thinkers.

This campaign thus far, has been a severely-long attempt to convince his constituents that he has been an effective Congressman, and will continue to be, even after last year's notoriety.

He is proud of the endorsements his campaign has received from many consumer groups, womens' rights organizations and labor unions. Known throughout his tenure as a liberal, Studds is also recognized in Washington and throughout the Tenth District as a brilliant orator with a resonant voice and a quick, biting sense of humor. He mixes these talents well in the numerous debates in which he has traditionally participated each campaign.

And although Studds would rather focus on anything else, it is clear from this muddied primary that his constituents are thinking about other choices, as the "undecided" factor looms large above the candidates' heads. His public confession last summer and the ensuing censure are not items his opponents will allow him to ignore. Altough this is a new type of campaign, it is likely the pattern Studds will follow the remainder of his days in politics.

Not since his first Congressional campaign in 1972 has Studds worked as agressively to hold onto that Congressional seat. In fact, it surprised and outraged some, that Studds finally made the decision a few months ago and tossed his tattered hat back into the political ring.

Whereas victory was a routine outcome in elections past, Studds is aware that this year he must wage a battle and convince his largely-conservative constituents that he has remained an effective and respected , issue-oriented, human rights activist, unafraid to tackle issues sensitive to more timid political souls.

Chris Trundy

Despite his age, Chris Trundy readily admits that he's no newcomer to politics. The 28-year-old New Bedford native launched his first political campaign in 1960 when he tried to get his mother and next door neighbors to vote for Kennedy."They voted for Nixon and I've been frustrated ever since," he joked.

His interest in the political process was sparked by that encounter and he's been at it ever since. He knocked on doors and carried signs for Studds when he was 15, worked for Ted Kennedy and other Democrats through the 70s and has only once supported a Republican. "Frank Hatch was the only Republican I ever worked for," he commented.

But this time, Chris Trundy is working for himself. The Independent Democrat, as he bills himself, is seeking election to Congress from the 10th District and faces Studds and Sheriff Peter Flynn in the Sept. 18 primary.

Trundy is campaigning on numerous issues including a renewed look at American's right to privacy and more equitable tax laws. He believes in a Nuclear Freeze and knows regional transportation is a crisis in this area of the state. He wants commitments from the Environmental Protection Agency that more will be done to clean up hazardous wastes, and he wants student college loans restructured.

After graduating from Southeastern Massachusetts University, Trundy worked for a credit bureau and was astonished at the advancement in computer technology and how credit bureau information could be used to invade the rights of Americans to privacy. He feels that the Democratic party has not addressed that or the erosion of other Constitutional rights and feels it's time other social issues were properly addressed as well.

As president of the National Equity Corporation in Franklin, which provides credit services to healthcare and higher education industries, Trundy is the only candidate from the private sector. He is running, he says, "because I'm interested in the issues. I'm concerned about the country's future which I'll have to experience a lot longer than Ronald Reagan."

Trundy feels Studds has "run out of gas" and should have retired within the past few years. "I'm positive that Studds would have retired if he hadn't been censured," Trundy said.

Does Trundy think his age will be an issue with voters? "I don't think it's meaningful and anyway I come across as being older. I look older because I've worried about nuclear war for such a long time. Seriously, James Shannon was elected for the first time when he was 24. It wasn't an issue with him. A lot of people my age are elected to Congress."

Chris Trundy is campaigning seriously for the seat but does he think he'll win? "I don't have any better idea of who's going to win than anybody else. There haven't been any scientific polls done. The only good thing about the polls that have been done is that 50 percent of the voters have been listed as undecided."

Trundy has campaigned so far primarily around New Bedford and on the Cape. He said he will concentrate on the South Shore more as the primaries move closer. Trundy believes he has made a contribution to the campaign already by changing its image. "I brought up the issues," he said.

Lew Crampton

Republican Congressional Candidate Lew Crampton says he can make a difference in Washington because of his professional experience in local, state and federal government.

The 45-year old candidate, who was raised in Duxbury and Cohasset, has been on the campaign trail since late March when he left his job as a top level administrator at the Environmental Protection Agency in Washington.

Throughout the campaign, Crampton has noted his goals of protecting New England's shoreline, providing better education for children and more meaningful jobs, reducing the national debt and lessening the threat of nuclear war.

Crampton began his career as a consultant on political affairs in the People's Republic of China at the Rand Corporation.

He returned to Massachusetts to work in the Boston Model Cities Program and went on to become Commissioner of the state Department of Community Affairs.

Crampton later worked as a special advisor to the state Legislature to modernize the state Environment Policy Act and to develop a new personnel system for legislative staff.

He worked as a research manager for Housing and Urban Development at Abt Associates and as a senior consultant at the Arthur D. Little Company. Crampton received several awards for his work forging state and federal cooperation in protecting the environment.

His educational degrees include a B.A. with honors from Princeton University's Woodrow Wilson School of Public and International Affairs, an M.A. from Harvard University in East Asian Studies and has done work in a doctoral program for Urban and Regional Planning at MIT.

With the goal of improving transportation, attracting businesses, providing increased funds for sewage treatment and reducing threats to the environment, Crampton has a four-point program for effectively keeping "what we have while allowing for the growth that we need."

RAIL SERVICE

Upgrading passenger and freight rail service in the 10th district is a key to creating new economic opportunities and will alleviate roadway congestion. The "linchpin" to the plan is the reconstruction of a heavy-rail railroad bridge over the Neponset River.

Crampton says this would create an important new link between Boston, the South Shore and beyond.

COMMUTER TRANSPORATION

The region's road system must be modernized to safely meet the increased demands. Alternative modes of transportation must be developed to ensure fast and efficient access. Without a better road system and improved access to Logan Airport, Crampton says attracting high technology industries into southeastern Mass. will be impossible.

The keys to an inproved transportation network are commuter boat and bus routes throughout the district, construction of a third Boston Harbor tunnel and the extension of Rte.44 to Plymouth.

SEWAGE AND WATER PROJECTS

The threatened groundwater resources of Cape Cod, the toxic wastes which poison New Bedford Harbor and the antiquated, over-burdened sewer systems of the South Shore underscore the need for a concerted effort to find resources to clean up and protect water resources.

Crampton's plan includes increasing the federal water and sewer budget from a current $2.5 billion to $4 billion a year and channeling more federal funds to the 10th District. He feels his experience as a top administrator in the EPA will be extremely helpful.

PRESERVING RESOURCES

There must be a definite strategy to conserve and preserve the area's natural and historical resources. Crampton proposes to create a marine sanctuary in the environmentally sensitive Georges Bank.

This sanctuary, he says, will not only preserve the coast but protect the world's most productive fishing waters from potential ruin.

Another example of protecting the area's natural and historical resources is in Hingham.

The federal government has a 753-acre former ammunition depot. The land which Hingham originally gave to the federal government should be returned to the town for free. Crampton feels the acquisition of the watershed property by the town would be valuableto further protect the North River.

"I do not think government has all the answers. Indeed my experience in both government and private industry allows me to appreciate the strengths of private initiatives and to recognize what government can and cannot do. What is most important, however, is the fact that I already know the issues which you and I consider to be important and I know how to make the bureaucracy work to achieve results," said Crampton.

REPUBLICAN PLATFORM

"I can support the broad economic and fiscal goals of the platform without quibbling about some of its details because that is precisely the position the President has taken with respect to this document.

"The platform was fashioned mainly by party activists from the South and West but I am a moderate from the Northeast who has to attract independents and conservative Democrats in order to win.

"The platform should have had more positive things to say about cleaning up and preserving our environment and of course it is disappointing to me that it does not include support for the Equal Rights Amendment," Crampton said.

ECONOMIC POLICY

Crampton says President Ronald Reagan's economic policy has produced "undeniably successful results" with sustained economic growth and low inflation.

He noted substantial growth in industrial productivity, real income and the "misery index" (the sum of the inflation and unemployment rates dropped from 20 to 12 percent.)

Although Crampton is pleased with the economic gains, he is concerned about the growing prospect of annual deficits in the $150 to $200 billion range.

Crampton supports a deficit reduction package which contains reductions in military spending of $10 to $15 billion through cancelling long-range weapons projects. He still supports improving the tactical weapons procurement program to improve combat readiness.

He also supports tax increases of $50 billion in the agreement reached by the House and Senate Conference Committees; cuts in non-defense spending of around $12 billion and an additional $5-6 billion in lower interest payments.

Two additional factors to control the budget are a line-item veto and progressive reform and simplication of the tax system.

George Donovan

George Donovan is a Republican of the conservative school. A graduate of B.C. High , Donovan is a maritime lawyer with offices in his hometown of Hull and in Boston.

His professional life and now his political life are involved with maritime law and he uses that experience and interest in his race for U.S. Congressman, namely the seat held by Democrat Gerry Studds.

First in the hurdles to the nation's capitol is the September primary. And it is Lew Crampton who is viewed by Donovan as the primary opponent.

Donovan has met with area fishermen on their own piers and he calls the 200 mile limit a facade — for one reason, because it does not include tuna fishing.

Also a veteran of involvement in murder cases "by appointment not by choice," Donovan considers capital punishment a clear deterr ent to crime. Death should be dealt by the judicial system, he says, when it results from a felony such as armed robbery and in cases of terrorism. "It's time," he says, to say, "Where are we going?' when it comes to the criminal."

Donovan calls himself, perhaps with agreement from others, a Conservative, as opposed to his seeing Crampton as a liberal.

And he supports the Reagan administration.

An old hand at supporting other candidates, he wanted Studds' seat in 1980 but deferred to Paul Doane's candidacy. In 1982 he repeated the process of stepping aside, that time on behalf of Jack Conway.

"Studds is a liberal in the most conservative district in Massachusetts," he said. "I am a conservative."

Donovan said he has made known his financial status and has turned down more than $50,000 in political action committee contributions. He says it is PAC money that will defeat Crampton..."Because Republicans in this district won't nominate a liberal. They've got to go to a Reagan-like Conservative, which I am."

He says the creation of one job in a deep water port like New Bedford would result in 50 jobs in a 50 mile radius. "The District has the opportunity to create 5,000 jobs," he said, "and that's 5,000 more than Studds has created in 12 years."

Donovan finds his concentration on maritime matters in the 10th District. "There are 38 towns in the district on the water," he said, "and there are only seven towns that are landlocked."

John Bennett

Provincetown real estate developer John Bennett threw his hat in the ring for a Congressional seat last April, when he saw the need for a true Republican to run for the position arise.

A firm supporter of the platforms of President Reagan, Bennett has pointed out throughout his campaign that the other republicans running are not totally for the Republican platform as Reagan sees it.

Bennett also believes that the censure of current Representative Gerry Studds should be looked at as more than just a "slap on the wrist. It is an extremely serious reprimand, second only to expulsion from the Congress. . .Why should the people in the 10th Congressional district. . .suffer from less effective representation because their Congressman freely-chose to abuse his high office. . .The simple truth is, we shouldn't."

Bennett said he is running for Congress mainly because he sees the need for a change. With the technical revolution on the horizon, he'd like to lead Massachusetts into the future.

Bennett was born and raised on Cape Cod, where he resides now. He is a member of the Massachusetts Bar as well.

U.S. and State Senate races

Next week the Mariner will focus on the race for Paul Tsongas' U.S. Senatorial seat.

3rd Norfolk/Plymouth

Richard Walsh

Richard R. Walsh is a teacher and Weymouth selectman. But if elected, he will surrender the position he has held for ten years in the Braintree school system and become a fulltime State Senator.

That is the basic difference, he feels, that separates himself from his opponent.

Another large separation evolves from Walsh's candor and ability to speak freely on all issues confronting his constituents in Norfolk and Plymouth counties. Whether it be state funding for abortion or the proposal to create two state authorities to oversee M.D.C. water and sewers, Walsh prides himself on his refusal to back away from answers.

Admittedly, this is not always the wisest choice for political survival, but Walsh says informed voters favor the person who will not sway with political favoritism, and will not shy away from politically-sensitive issues.

While his opponent makes sweeping statements, approving the clean-up of our harbors, Walsh said his campaign is digging into solutions and coming out with positions on all varieties of issues affecting the voters.

His interest in politics began many years ago, when he first ran for the Weymouth Tree and Park Commission. And his notorious reputation as an independent thinker and speaker was illustrated back then when Senator Allan McKinnon talked to his former student about the local campaign. When McKinnon asked if Walsh would like his formal endorsement, he respectfully declined. Walsh has yet to seek the endorsement of any past or present politicians, he states.

A longtime Weymouth resident, Walsh stands boldly in favor of raising the drinking age to 21; the multi-million tax break which was subsequently vetoed by the Governor (Walsh would work against that veto); and he is against legalized gambling in the state.

Another facet of his campaign has been brazen accusations that his opponent is a "carpetbagger," new to the district, "handpicked and beholden to others, Weather . . .

The mean temperature was 71 degrees, .5 degrees above normal. The average daily maximum reading was 79.2 degrees, while the average daily minimum was 62.7 degrees. The low temperature for the month was 49 degrees on the 26th, with a high reading of 89 degrees on the 7th and 15th.

There were 12 cloudy days, 16 partly cloudy days, and only three clear days. The average wind speed was 7.9 mph; normal is 10.7 mph. The highest observed gust was 25 mph on August 29th.

SEPTEMBER OUTLOOK

On September 22, at 3:33 p.m., the Autumnal Equinox occurs. Soon autumn's gentle breezes will carry the memories of summer away and we will be bracing for yet another winter. Compared to last September's record setting heat, this year should see cooler than average temperatures and likely above normal precipitation.

The first week will be a stormy period with wide spread rains. From the 10th-17th it should be basically fair, but could become unsettled, if a front becomes stationary. The 18th-23rd is a storm period and the Eastern Seaboard will be susceptible to a hu. ricane if one were to be in the right position. Heavy rain and high winds are indicated.

The end of the month will see fair weather with the exception of possible thunderstorms or scattered showers.

WEATHER Q AND A

Q. Can any storm be called a hurricane if the wind is high enough?

A. No. The term "hurricane" is properly applied only to tropical cyclones with winds of 64 knots or higher. If the winds in a storm are of this strength, regardless of the type of storm with which they are associated, they are referred to as hurricane-force winds.

The pause that refreshes on a work year

By Lois Martin

It wasn't Europe, or any part thereof, nor the sensually-touted haunts of the Caribbean where one is rumored to pass time in madcap, moonlit nights.

But my summer vacation was easily the most relaxing week in memory.

And it was as simple as it was releasing. Probably "vacation" comes from the verb "vacate." Well, I did, or rather worries, cares and duties did as I replaced those with ardent dedication to my week off.

PATCHES

Back to Brooksville is back to basics, where God still makes flowers both diminutive and mammoth to flourish in the wide open fields by the cove across from Castine. I ran in the field the first morning at 6 a.m. seeking to show time's claim on me at a loss. My only regret was that Terry Martin wasn't there then, 'cause I swear I could have beat him.

And there was a lot to be done — swimming, blueberry picking, the Jolly Helpers Church Fair, the honor system purchases from a vegetable stand. Aunt Ruth to see along with Aunt Lote and family.

There was even a county GOP picnic to be attended and since my family is equally as Republican as American, I took part in that in spite of not carrying the banners of the party by way of bumper stickers.

There were visits with old friends and a minor shopping spree with my mother before I took the long road home.

And once back in Humarock I sat down with Russell Baker, by way of his book "Growing Up." It is a lucid, earnest, endearing account of the growth of the author. You must read it. Start on any chapter of your choosing. It does not challenge. It warms as does a visit with any storyteller.

There was a brief point in the week when I stopped by the office on business. I must have appeared annoyingly refreshed, my nose still shining with full quota of Maine and Massachusetts sunshine. I looked at my desk and at the remnants of the efforts of those who did my work in my absence.

I breezed back to vacating for the week without a smidgen of shame. There was still a lot not to be done in my time off. So I read another book, caught up on plans for a bridal brunch and invited friends for dinner.

Saturday I witnessed something I'd never seen before. Humarock's Labor Day Horribles parade. It was the frosting on summer. The bus carrying the musicians "Grenadiers" from Medford came early that morning, parking by the bridge and offering warm-up drum rolls hours in advance of the march.

I walked across the bridge at parade time and stood where others gathered. They came with lawn chairs and in some cases, wheelchairs. They were on bikes, and on foot and on backs if they were tiny.

The judges were perched on a flat bed of a truck, wearing ribbons ordaining their responsibility in the parade. The trophies awaited presentation on a card-table in that same front yard of somebody's house.

The parade was led by the Scituate safety car, a decorated Volkswagen with a nose, hat and flapping front hood. I gathered the parade was not an unwelcome chore for the official driver after I spotted him down River Street doing a brief dance with the firefighter who was with the department engine.

It's a marvel, I decided, that spectators were available because from what I could see everyone was in the parade. Floats carried men and women and children, sometimes singing. One delightfully raucous one had a devilish message with an "Ode to a Commode."

There were two fife and drum corps, countless kids in costume and warm applause for the paraders. I cannot imagine it could be counted as anything other than a great success.

Off and on throughout the day it occurred to me that I should stop by the office and have at my desk, just to get an idea of where I'd be in coming back to work.

But I put that off until this morning, a Sunday and the early part of it. I'm not without my reasons. Terry's home packing to leave for school again. And I've pampered myself by not being witness to that deed. Soon enough I'll see his room empty save for the debris of his summer's occupancy. That'll shape me up, bring me back to responsible adulthood.

Actually I've always loved work, sometimes to a fault. But this week I've learned the pleasure in a respite of calm, of postponing deadlines, letters and errands in favor of a private peace in an honest-to-goodness week off.

Back to the desk, the delightful encounters of my little workworld and the challenges I bet I can handle.

I have no baubles from far off places. Instead there's a bumper sticker on my car that some scoundrel of a friend put there: "I love Marvelous Marvin."

I'll handle that, too, right after I get my horn fixed and clean up Terry's room. He'll be back, ebbing and flowing into the house throughout his college years. I recommend that coming and going . . . Russell Baker . . . Brooksville and a little vacating to give meaning and merit to getting back to work.

Cable's impact on the public school curriculum

By Mike Berger

One of the most significant developments in school curriculum over the next few years is cable television.

And school superintendents will band together to discuss how much of an impact cable will make on each School Dept.

Sept. 12, the Scituate School Dept. will host a "Lighthouse Superintendents" meeting, a regional group of school administrators from Hull to Duxbury.

The superintendents will meet to discuss regional goals for cable television and will be shown what American Cablesytemshas produced to date for graduations, sports programs, assemblies and play productions. In addition, Scituate's Frank Viscarolasaga, Audio Visual and Library Systems Director, will demonstrate how to use cable equipment.

To have a better understanding, Mariner reporters and editors compiled information regarding how each community's School Dept. has prepared for cable television this year.

MARSHFIELD

Thanks to Greater South Shore Cablevision, the Marshfield school system will be able to produce its own television programs with its own equipment, in its own studio and broadcast them on its own channel.

Cablevision Program Director Judith Greenmayer says Cablevision has given the School Dept. enough equipment to outfit a complete studio and a remote system.

When the studio is built at the high school this fall by students as part of Project Enterprise, it will house three cameras, microphones, lights and a deck.

There will also be a character generator so the programs can be titled and captioned, two camera control units and a sound board with four inputs.

A wave form monitor will allow the technicians to evaluate and regulate the quality of the picture being broadcast.

An internal sound system has been provided to let the director talk to crew members without being heard over the air. Television shows will be put together with the help of a complete editing system.

Besides working from the studio, students and faculty members will be able to broadcast live on location with the remote equipment supplied by the cable firm.

These broadcasts might feature sporting events, award ceremonies, graduation, theater productions and maybe even school committee meetings.

Greenmayer says Cablevision has custom-designed the studio so that it is portable and can be moved from location to location.

The unique design allows all the equipment to fit into the back of a large van.

SCITUATE

The progress of American Cablesystems and the construction of a cable studio within Scituate High School will combine for the establishment of an inhouse school cable program by year's end.

The town voted to spend $25,000 to renovate Lecture Hall B into a cable studio and construction is expected to be completed by December.

By late fall, the school committee is expected to adopt specific cable television guidelines for production and procedures.

The committee must determine what programs will be televised, and who controls the tapes and the editing.

Once the studio is completed and the formal guidelines are established, the next step is for staff training.

NORWELL

In Norwell, school officials are taking a thoughtful, cautious approach to the use of cable television. A six-session workshop has already been planned for teachers which will start in October.

When the workshop ends, teachers, administrators and the system's media advisory, Lou Tardie, will use use guidelines from other towns to formulate a policy for Norwell.

Asst. Supt. Claire Sheff said that there is talk already about some public programming, for instance career planning and SAT preparation shows, but that those probably would not get off the ground until late fall.

Meanwhile School Supt. Robert Bunnell has beer meeting with superintendents from other towns that have American Cablesystems licenses to encourage communication and to see what direction those towns are taking with their cable systems.

Sheff said Norwell's teachers were introduced to cable last spring when a half-day session with cable personnel was planned on a school release day.

"We will take it slowly and intelligently," Sheff said, "and make it the best possible use of the new medium."

Pat Farrell, Norwell's program director for American Cablesystems, said her company plans to start Oct 1 with 25 hours a week of community programming.

She said the company will put heavy emphasis on sports because the towns American cover play each other in the same league. A game of the week will be featured.

"We have left slots open for educational programming and are waiting now to hear from the superintendents," Farrell added.

HANOVER

County Cable TV is in the process of wiring Hanover residences to the town's new system and the schools will be a big part of that system.

The schools will have ample hook-ups for both broadcasting and receiving cable transmissions. Two newer schools, the junior high and Cedar Elementary School are already wired for cable and wiring for the high school, Center and Sylvester Elementary Schools will be completed by late September.

School Supt. Dr. Robert Fox said the televisions and hardware needed to hook into the cable system are not available, nor is the money in the school budget.

Media Director Frank Curren is working towards obtaining some of the equipment from state and federal grants.

Looking toward the future, Fox said, "A lot more will be available in the future. For example, advanced placement courses for six towns could be possible through cable."

Fox also projects in possibly five to eight years, school will be able to merge their cable and computer programs.

He is wary of how much the schools will be involved in broadcasting community programs such as town meetings, athletic games and high school plays.

"The town may want alot from us and I'm afraid if the schools are expected to produce a lot of hours we will need a production person. We have nobody on staff now to handle that. This is a problem all towns are facing. They may have six hours of programming to air each week and people get upset when they show this week's lunch menu for an hour. But it's like a newspaper; you can't put one out without reporters," Fox said.

The high school currently has an audio-visual program which will continue under teacher Bill Cooke.

Fox said, "The cable firm has also offered training programs but at this point it's all vague. I'd also like to see kids get involved as performers but again you have quite a bit of logistical stuff on training."

COHASSET

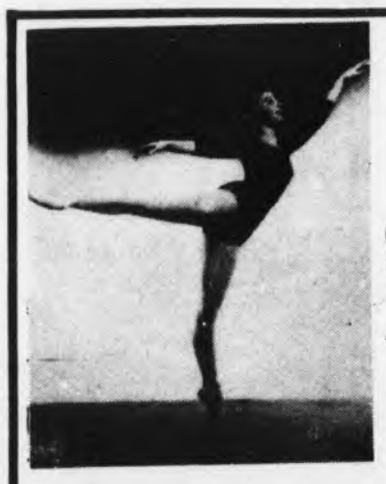
Supervisor John Packard says the future utilization of cable within the schools is endless.

What once housed Rooms 106 and 107 at the high school is in the midst of conversion now, soon to be a cable production stuio, editing, storage, office and radio rooms.

As part of the contract between the town and American Cablesystems, the school system was provided with two color cameras, two portable recorders, two editing decks with monitors, tripods and dollies for the cameras, cables, cassette recorders, a set of portable lights, a machine which records titles on the screens and microphones.

Packard envisions all day use of the cable equipment and production areas. Because the rooms are situated close to the high school's main offices, access to the studio will be available throughout the day.

With the community television studio downtown, many students have already or about to complete production training. These apprentices will then be ready to start some serious cable programming for the school system during the day and perhaps help with community productions at the downtown location during the evening.



"I hope," Packard said, "that eventually every classroom in Cohasset will have a cable drop. I truly believe the future of cable is in data transmission. This is the real future of cable television, especially within the schools.

"Once cable is in and we are able to receive and transmit from two points in the network, the capabilities are unlimited. If someone is lecturing at one school, hundreds of other students in surrounding towns will be able to listen to that person and ask questions directly to him," he said.

Through the Channel 3 bulletin board notices, school organizations and activities will have expanded publicity and will generate greater community interest. School sports and perhaps school plays will be broadcast for a greater audience than ever before.

Conservatory students to perform at MFA

Twenty-four young students from the South Shore Conservatory of Music have been invited to perform at a special reception and supper at the Boston Museum of Fine Arts Thursday, Sept. 13. The reception, already sold out, precedes the premiere of the movie "Amadeus" at the Charles Theater.

This event is a benefit for the Museum's Endowment Fund for their film program. The South Shore Conservatory is a non-profit community school of the arts which has branches in Hingham, Duxbury and Brockton. For the past 15 years, a professional faculty has prepared young people for higher institutions of learning and careers in music.

The school also offers a variety of programs in the performing arts for the cultural enrichment of all ages and levels of ability and special free concerts and programs for the communities they serve.

The subject of the movie, Mozart, prompted Mrs. Terrence White, a Cohasset resident and member of the Museum Ladies' Committee, to ask the Conservatory to participate.

"How appropriate to have talented young musicians, who may well be the performing artists of the future, to play for this particular occasion," Mrs. White said.

The musical program for the evening has been coordinated by Dan Riley, who has just finished conducting the chamber music part of the Conservatory's Summer Wind Ensemble program.

Riley and Douglas Wauchope, Assistant Director of the Conservatory, have chosen students for their musicianship and potential who range from 10 to 18 years old.

They will play works by Mozart and his contemporaries in various chamber music groupings of brasses and woodwinds. There will also be several piano solos.

South Shore students who will participate are: Martha Dwyer and Michael Joyal of Norwell, Charles Petrizzi from Marshfield, Brooks Holmes of Scituate, Kim diBari of Pembroke; Joe Mazza and Kerry Kirkendall from Cohasset, and Jonathan Kehew and Susan Johnson of Hingham.

Kinderchor to hold auditions Tuesday

Auditions for the South Shore Conservatory's children'schoir, will be held at the school, off 19 Fort Hill Street in Hingham ,Tuesday, Sept. 11 at 3:15 p.m.

This group of youngsters has become well known in the area.

Directed by Margo Euler, the advanced section has performed at many events at the conservatory and around the South Shore.

This year there will be three sections of Kinderchor: K I for beginners six to nine years old will involve songs and games to teach musicianship and the beginnings of note reading — no audition is necessary.

K II (eight to 11 years old) is for children with a good ear and who have the ability to concentrate and sing on key.

This group is geared to increasing music reading and performance techniques with a varied repertoire of two and three parts. Audition is necessary.

K III (10 to 14 years old) will refine reading skills, explore more sophisticated part-music and involve more performing. An audition is required.

Mrs. Euler urges children who would like to join K II or K III to contact the SSCM office at 749-7565 for an audition time Sept. 11.

The audition will be informal and supportive and children should come prepared to sing a short song they like and enjoy singing.

Scituate gallery opens Burke one-man show

"I love straight-from-the-tube color, and truly, I have a good time painting."

Meeting Hingham's Betty Burke one can easily see why she enjoys her work and why bright color pleases her.

Through September the Scituate Art Association Gallery, Scituate Harbor, will hold a one-man show of Betty's work.

This is her third such show and it follows closely the winning of another prize in South Shore exhibits.

She took second prize at the Brockton Summerfest Show in July and carried off first prize in Hull in 1981 and in Cohasset in 1983.

Betty Burke has been presented at the Staircase Gallery, Hingham, the Quincy Savings Bank, Cohasset, the Hingham Library, the South Shore Art Center, Cohasset. She has also been represented in many juried shows on the South Shore.

Her paintings are currently exhibited at the Scituate Arts Association Gallery and at the South Shore Art Center. She is a member of the Copley Society, South Shore Art Center, and the Scituate Art Association of which she is secretary and treasurer.

Hours for opening reception are 12-5 p.m.

Gallery hours are: Tues. through Sat. 10-5, Sunday, noon to 5 p.m. and the gallery is closed Mondays.

The Scituate Art Association Gallery is located at 134 Front Street, Scituate Harbor, 545-6150.

South Shore artists to exhibit at Art Complex Museum

Dennis Kowal and Richardson White of Cohasset will be two of the artists included in The First Invitational Exhibition of the Art Complex Museum to be held from Sept. 14 through Nov. 11. An opening reception for the artists will be on Sunday, Sept. 16, from 2 to 5 p.m.

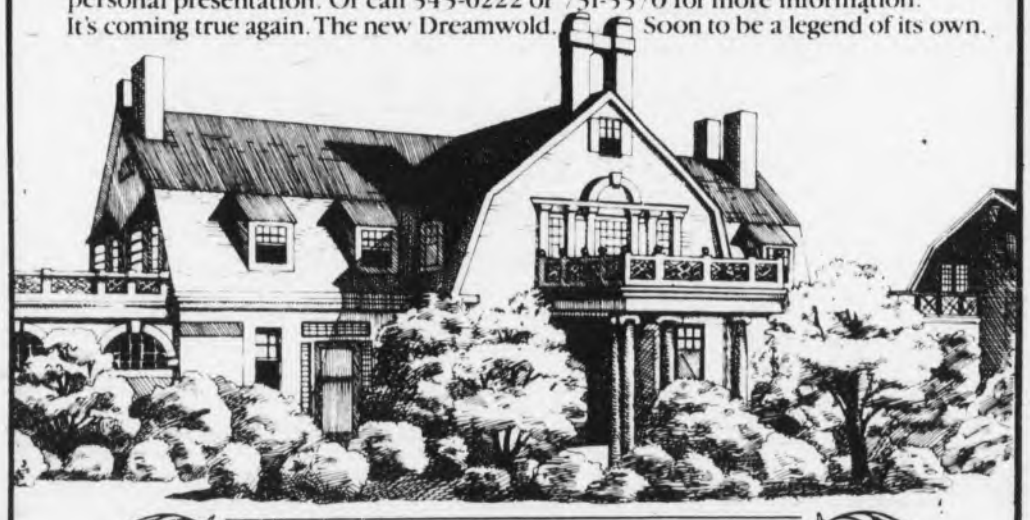
The exhibition will feature the works of eight South Shore artists and sculptors who are considered exemplary in their fields. Included will be: the trompe l'oeil paintings of David Brega of Marshfield; prints and paintings by Berj Kailian of Weymouth; aquatints by Wilfred Loring of Hingham; watercolors by Mary Lizotte of Norwell; sculpture by Dennis Kowal and Richardson White, both of Cohasset; watercolors and oils by Charles Mahoney of Scituate and Marshall Joyce of Kingston.

Once upon a time, not so far away,

a brave Copper King built an enchanted kingdom in a land by the sea.

There in Scituate, he surrounded his mansion with idyllic pastures and formal gardens. Then built a fairy tale tower to watch over his dream.

Some said he was eccentric. Others said he was vain. But in truth, the legendary millionaire, Thomas Lawson, was building a beautiful haven as a gift for his beloved family. And in 1903, Dreamwold came true.



Now it's coming true again.

All the majesty, privacy and splendor that was Dreamwold. In twenty-six unique Victorian condominium residences encircling a spectacular rose garden and beautiful swimming pool.

Dreamwold. A magnificent blend of historic restoration and new construction as only Boston's premier developer, Parencorp, could do.

This summer, Dreamwold is available at pre-marketing prices, starting in the mid-100's. Visit Dreamwold between 11:00 AM and 6:00 PM daily for a personal presentation. Or call 545-0222 or 731-5570 for more information.

It's coming true again. The new Dreamwold. Soon to be a legend of its own.

Candidates corner

Walsh on rules reform

Richard R. Walsh, a candidate for state Senate from the Norfolk-Plymouth District, recently reiterated his support for rule changes which would democratize and clean up the way the state Legislature is run.

"Here, almost within the shadow of the Old North Church, Bunker Hill and Faneuil Hall, we have a state House and Senate that is more autocratic than any other in the country," Walsh told voters gathered for a coffee hour at the home of Pat and Frank Campbell of Marshfield.

Walsh, a Weymouth selectman, said Beacon Hill is becoming transformed from a "cradle of liberty to a sinkhole of special interests. And it has to stop."

Walsh noted that he has answered affirmatively to each of ten questions asked on a questionnaire sent to all state legislative candidates by the Coalition for Legislative Reform, and umbrella group which ranges from Citizens for Participation in Political Action on the left to Citizens for Limited Taxation on the right.

The coalition's measures, all of which Walsh supports, call for full public hearings on all bills, an independent audit of the Legislature's accounts and records, smaller bonus pay for those assigned by Legislative leaders to chair committees, and secret-ballot selection for House and Senate leadership positions.

"Too much power is in the hands of too few people," Walsh said. "And when you diffuse powers — and return it to the scores of lawmakers elected from across the state — you make the job of the special interest lobbies on Beacon Hill much more difficult. I'm all for that."

Walsh also reiterated his promise to run a PAC-free campaign.

"I have not sought, nor will I accept money from political acton committees of any ideology, viewpoint, or persuasion," Walsh told voters gathered for a coffee hour at the home of Linda and Jim Thomas of Scituate.

Walsh said political action committees are "nothing more than a vehicle established to end run the best intentions of campaign reformers. Post-Watergate reformers wanted to curb the influence individual contributors can have on a candidate, and that's a gesture I applaud. However, in the process they opened the door to even larger, institutional giving by special interests PACS."

Walsh, who has called on the other candidates in the race to take the "no-PAC" pledge, noted that individuals, at least, are restricted in the amount they can give ($1,000). And every donation in excess of $200 must be accompanied by the donor when candidates file with the state's Office of Campaign Finance.

Doherty coordinators

At a campaign organizational meeting Sept. 2, at the Scituate home of Harvey and Leslie Russ, Anna Doherty, the Republican candidate for State Senate, announced Harvey Russ and John Clarkeson, both of Scituate, would be the Town Coordinators for her campaign.

In speaking with campaign volunteers at the meeting, Doherty emphasized the importance of balance in the State Senate. Currently there are only seven Republican senators in the forty member senate, leaving the minority one vote short of the eight votes necessary to force a roll call.

One more Republican senator would mean that the Democrats would have to be recorded.

"The Independents and Republicans constitute a majority in this district," said Doherty, "and according to a Boston Globe article last week, Senator David Lock sees an opportunity to gain this senate seat for the Republicans."

Golden coordinator

Clark Chatterton of 9 Red Gate Lane, has been named Cohasset coordinator for the Lew Crampton Congressional Campaign.

Chatterton graduated from Cohasset High School and attended Knox College and graduated from Springfield College in 1967. He joined Cohasset High School Physical Education Department in 1968. Chatterton coached football for six years, basketball for eight years, and baseball for 10 years.

He has been Athletic Director at Cohasset High School since 1974, and is employed as a concessionaire at South Shore Music Circus since 1961.

She's more than an executive

After raising a family with seven children, it's not such a difficult task to preside over a town of 8000. Just ask the new Acting Executive Secretary Janet Chalke.

Days (and some evenings) are spent behind an official-looking desk within the selectmen's office. She appears the consummate professional.

And at night, the Scituate resident can be found huddling around her children and husband on First Parish Road, orchestrating some type of organization within that household. There are similarities between her two assignments.

But when asked to choose between the two, there is really no choice at all for Janet. "My family is my first priority. I don't want a career at this point. I want a job that I leave each day to go back to my family," she simply states.

That is why Janet, although highly recommended by former Executive Secretary Mark Lanza to take his place in the interim, will not apply for the fulltime position.

She is not old-fashioned, but much prefers the Car dealer files zoning law suit

After operating a used car business along Chief Justice Cushing Highway for the past 18 years, Joseph Rosano was ordered to shutdown last month. He is now fighting that zoning board ruling in Dedham Superior Court.

A complaint was filed Sept. 6 by Rosano's attorney, Walter Sullivan, appealing the decision made last month by the Cohasset Zoning Board of Appeals. That board denied the resident a special permit to sell used cars on his Route 3A property.

It began several months when Rosano was informed by former Executive Secretary Mark Lanza that he would need a special permit to operate the small scale car business on the property which is zoned light industry.

Although Rosano remarked that he had a proper license for the business, and selectmen's approval from years past, he agreed to abide by Lanza's decision.

"Lanza told me I wouldn't need an attorney to represent me at the zoning board meeting, and I wouldn't need an engineer to draw any plans. He said it would just be a formality - I'd have no problem getting the permit," Rosano's son Joal stated. "That was the fatal mistake. I went by myself to the hearing and I find out later that my request is denied and I have to stop my business."

He is continuing to sell vehicles on the premises while the case is being appealed in court.

The board's denial of the permit came as a jolt to Rosano, who said through the years he has developed the business into a profitable venture. "After so many years, I can select the cars I want to sell. I only sell one or two at a time and they are gone in a couple of days," he explained.

His business earns the younger Rosano an annual income of about $40,000.

Rosano applied for a special permit to conduct the used car busines known as Pilgrim Auto Sales at 223 Chief Justice Cushing Highway. As noted in the zoning board's decision, the business had been operating there for a number of years prior to the strict enforcement of the town's bylaws by the current Building Inspector.

In its written decision, the zoning board explained, "this business would be incompatible with the activity occurring in adjacent properties to permit a haphazard business to continue. It is inconsistent for this Board and other town boards to require, on the one hand, that other developers pay special attention to sight lines and location of curb cuts and on the other hand to permit the Applicant's ill-defined business use of the property."-

Rosano noted that during last month's hearing, a representaive of the Tarzia Corp., which is planning to construct a bank along the business strip of Cohasset's Route 3A, objected to Rosano's undefined business. He

Recreation cash stolen twice this summer

By Jane Lane

Recreation Director Jack Worley informed the town accountant this week that a total of $273 was stolen on two different occasions this summer from the facility stickers cash box at Town Hall.

Worley charges negligence in guarding the cash safebox by a 15-year old C.E.T.A. worker who was in charge of the issuance of the stickers during the two separate incidents.

In his letter to Accountant William Signorelli, Worley stated, "the theft had to have taken place during the day/working hours. which indicates negligence in keeping track of where the box was left during the day, unattended. The most essential problem regarding this aspect was having a 15 year-old in charge of the operation."

Worley noted that the incidents occurred during his vacation weeks, when the C.E.T.A. worker was hired to take care of the issuance of the facility stickers.

The first theft occurred during the week of August 13 when $56 was reported missing from the cash box. At this time, the box was left in the hallway desk the evening of August 15 when the building was open from 6 to 9:30 p.m. for a Youth Band Concert. The money was reported missing the next day.

Tuesday morning, Sept. 4, the cash box was missing $216 which was "most likely lost/stolen during the week of August 27," Worley said. After checking through receipts, it was determined that only cash was taken, and probably on Wednesday, August 29 or Thursday morning, August 30.

Director Worley said that on the second instance, the cash box had been left on the third floor of the Town Hall, which employees refer to as the coffee room. The room contains a rear access into the building.

"It is difficult to determine how the money was taken. The only thing that remains certain is that it never should have happened as the cash box was being locked up in the Treasurer's office safe each evening," Worley concluded.

Disturbed that such an occurrence could happen twice within three weeks, Worley said he will be requesting additional clerical help to assist with the facility stickers next summer. The additional clerks would issue the stickers on weeks the director is away on vacation. He would like the budget to reflect additional clerical help in the mornings throughout the summer.

The cash box was previously tampered with last summer when someone got into the treasurer's safe and stole a similar amount of cash and checks. Since that time, he said, extra security measures have been established by the treasurer-collector's office. "This theft," Worley continued, "is particularly disturbing as a great deal of work and worry has been negated on two occasions within three weeks."

DeSantis angered at non cooperation

No impact report needed

The state Environmental Policy Act unit (MEPA) has determined that an environmental impact report of the town's proposed wastewater treatment plant will not be necessary.

Sewer Commission Chairman Charles DeSantis announced that decision at the commission's meeting Tuesday night. The town had fought against the need for such a study, calling it "superfluous, unnecessary, and a gross waste of Cohasset's money."

The chairman was obviously pleased that another obstacle has been avoided in the town's attempt to gain construction grant funding. He had vehemently opposed the need for such a report, noting "we're ready to roll with the Ward Engineering plan. We've got the momentum and we don't want to lose it by an unnecessary study."

At this week's meeting, DeSantis had some harsh words for other Cohasset boards who fought against DeSantis, and requested the state require the impact study. The Water Commission in a written letter to MEPA, stated that an impact study should be required (Commissioner Peter Pratt opposed that position) and the Board of Health also communicated its objections to the Ward plan and advised the state to require the additional report.

MEPA representatives met with town officials August 19 in a public session to determine the applicability of an impact report. At that meeting, the two town boards stood against the sewer commission in its fight against the report.

DeSantis said although the state ultimately decided not to require the study, the opposition of other town boards cost Cohasset in additional legal fees. Because all their arguments had to be refuted by the sewer commission's special legal counsel, time and money was expended to counteract their positions, DeSantis said.

Angered at what he saw as a direct violation by these boards of town meeting's mandate to approve the Ward plan, DeSantis has comprised two letters to the Water Commission and Board of Health.

Vote Sept 18

Here's the call to all Cohasset's civic-minded citizens from Town Clerk Frances Marks. Cast your ballot in the September 18 election primary.

The polls will be open from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m. at the Town Hall auditorium.

Absentee ballots are available at the Town Clerk's office until noontime Monday, Sept. 17. Applications for the absentee ballots are at the office, or a registered voter may cast his absentee ballot there.

The state primary election requires all registered Republicans to vote for their party; all Democrats to cast a Democratic ballot. If someone is a registered Independent, he may choose a ballot from either party,but unless he re-registers Independent, he will remain a member of the party for which he cast his ballot in this primary election.

There is likely to be a large voter turnout next Tuesday as this heated campaign tones down for a brief respite before the November national election.

The most important races which Cohasset voters will help to decide include the U.S. Senate seat: Republican Elliot Richardson against Ray Shamie; or Democrats John Kerry, David Bartley, Michael Connolly and Jim Shannon. The U.S. Representative seat is a contest between Republican Lew Crampton, George Donovan,and John Bennett; and Democrats Gerry Studds, Christopher Trundy

Cohasset's week . . .

Water Main Work

Important notice to Cohasset water consumers residing in the following areas: 1. Border St., From American Legion Hall to Otis Ave; 2. Joy Place, From #30 Joy Place to Gammons Rd; 3. Jerusalem Road, From intersection of Jerusalem Rd. and Atlantic Ave. to Forest Ave.

Please be advised that on or about Sept. 17, we will begin Phase II, 805 Grant Rehabilitation on the aforementioned streets.

The result will be improved quality and service. Unfortunatley, there may be periods of disruption or discoloration during the approximate 50 day construction.

The Board of Water Commissioners wish to thank all consumers in these areas for their anticipated cooperation.

Note: If your water discolors, turn on an outside cold faucet to clear your line. Leave hot water lines off.

Harbor flats closed

The state Division of Marine Fisheries informed the selectmen late last month that according to the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE), the waters and flats and all tributaries of Cohasset Harbor, southwest of a line drawn across the breakwater, will remain closed.

The defined area was closed off because of a bacterial contamination, the Division Director Philip Coates stated. Therefore, all harvesting of shellfish for human consumption of prohibited until the DEQE rules otherwise.

Facility proposal hearing

The selectmen will hold a public hearing Tuesday, at 7:30 p.m. in the Town Hall auditorium regarding the proposed construction of an Intermediate Care Facility for the mentally handicapped on Crocker Lane.

The state Department of Mental Health is proposing to locate a housing facility for several mentally retarded young adults on former state Department of Public Works land. The land is located on Crocker Lane, off Chief Justice Cushing Highway.

Sewer line inspection

Sewer Commission chairman Charles DeSantis has informed the Water Commission that if no damage is detected in the sewer lines along Stockbridge Road at Margin Street, the sewer commission will pay the cost of the televised inspection.

When Geneva Construction was repairing water mains along Atlantic Avenue, sewer commissioners feel a crack may have occurred in a sewer line at the Stockbridge Street crossing. At a joint meeting of the selectmen, sewer and water commissions, it was agreed that the contractor would expose the pipe and place stone underneath of pipe to prevent future settling. At that time, the commission suggested that Geneva Construction, through the Water Dept. bond, pay the cost of the inspection.

The sewer commission requested that the pipes be to locate any possible undetected problems before the Border Street water project commences.

Golf club appeal

Hingham resident Austin Studley has appealed a Cohasset Conservation Commission's condition of orders regarding the Cohasset Golf Club's attempts to alleviate flooding on the fairway.

Studley is a Cedar Street resident whose property is the site of frequent flooding caused by water runoff from the Turkey Hill Run property.

At recent Conservation Commission meetings, Studley and other Cedar Street residents warned the board that the club's proposal to alleviate its flooding may add to the residents' problems.

Studley appealed the commission's verdict last month to the state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE), requesting a superceding order that will prohibit any water being pumped downstream to the thickly settled Hazardous Flood Area in Hingham.

When the Cohasset Commission issued its condition of orders, its specified that the golf club not pump water during peak flooding periods. A flashboard and concrete weir system will be used several days after the actual flooding has occurred. At that time, a pump will be used to discharge the excess water from the seventh and eighth fairways downstream in a brook along the golf course.

Studley's appeal also requested that all construction on the drainage system be stopped until the DEQE has made a final determination.

Wheel Wright Farm granted special permit

By Lisa Messersmith

Wednesday, Sept. 5, the Planning Board granted a special permit for site preparation work to begin at Wheel Wright Farm, a residential cluster development on Beechwood Street.

The development will be under the condominium form of ownership and is expected to be completed within three years.

According to the plan approved by the planning board, 42 single-family homes will be constructed on 22.5 acres. When asked by member Patrick Plante what the development would do for Cohasset, developer Wayne Sawchuk and Atty. Robert Sawyer brought forth several points.

The Wheel Wright Farm site, they said, promises to preserve open space, minimize environmental disruption, and retain the farm-like setting of the land. Most of the homes will be built around a 3.5 acre piece of land which will function as a common for the community. Sawchuk also intends to leave the existing stone walls, and construct smaller stone walls to create yards around individual homes.

Board members Daniel Cotton and John O'Toole expressed their concern about the number and type of trees which will be razed because of construction. Sawchuk assured the board that the only trees to be cut down would be those directly on the construction site. Twenty-two trees of certain age and girth were identified and will remain, Sawchuk stated, while other clusters of trees will stay intact whenever possible. The developer also intends to plant additional trees along the common roads.

The development itself will be comprised of single-family two-bedroom units ranging between 1,500 square feet and 1,900 square feet. The prices for the homes will start at $130,000 and a monthly maintenance charge will cover lawn work and exterior repair.

Board member Plante asked why the development did not offer smaller and less expensive housing which would be affordable by young couples. Sawchuk said this development will be the most inexpensive housing in Cohasset for the past two years, and added that similar developments sell for about $225,000. Sawchuk also emphasized that attaching the units would not lower the price substantially, and would not take away from the quality of the setting.

The plan presented last Wednesday complies with the board's previous request to decrease the amount of pavement by 7,000 square feet. The width of the road encircling the development has now been reduced to 22 feet. Easements to allow fire and safety vehicles were also approved.

Sawchuk and his associates have submitted plans to the Board of Health and are currently awaiting a decison. That board must approve the common sewage system before site preparation work begins at Wheel Wright Farm.

Planning board briefs

Bates Lane development

At the Planning Board meeting Wednesday, Sept. 5, board members pressed developer William Last to present a plan for the Bates Lane development which would meet with the board's requirements.

Drainage Committee members attended the meeting to express their concerns about the flow of water onto adjoining lots from the one on which Last intends to build.

In preparation for construction, fill was brought onto the site to heighten the level of the land. As a result, rain water flowed onto the abutters' yards and eventually into their basements. Drainage Committee Chairman Walter Ross stated that the neighbors have a "legitimate complaint."

The planning board's concern centered on the plan which Last presented at the meeting. This plan was the original one approved by the planning board. Board members insisted that Last either revert back to the original plan or construct a new one which would effectively deal with the drainage issue and meet the planning board's requirements. Last promised to return to the original. Board member Patrick Plante added, "you know what you have to do."

atmosphere of her home and family to that of a 10-hour work day within Cohasset Town Hall.

A former secretary for a Scituate Harbor lawyer, Janet was itching to get back into employment where she would meet the public. When she resided several years ago in Boynton Beach, Florida, she had accepted several positions within the municipal government there, her favorite being secretary to the Town Manager.

And when selectmen make a final choice for the town's new executive secretary, Janet will be satisfied with her decision to return to her former duties outside the selectmen's office as administrative secretary.

That job, where she constantly meets and assists citizens who arrive with a barrage of questions, is more to her liking than her present temporary employment.

"So far, there have been no problems. I am fairly well acquainted with how this office runs and what has to be done. But I will be content going back to my old job," she says.

Janet's vocation in life is her family, a rather large one of which she is obviously proud. the seven children include Paul, and eighth-grade student at Gates Intermediate .School; Elizabeth, a tenth grade Scituate High School student and Neil, an 11th grade student there; Sheila, a sophomore at St. Michael's College in Vermont; John, a junior at Connecticut College; Susan, a political organizer at Cortland State College in New York, and Janet, who works for the Tandy Corporation. Her husband Phillip rounds out the family. He is a native of South Weymouth.

Janet loves her hometown of Scituate where her family has resided since 1967, and the people she has met in Cohasset since she began last February.

"I've made a lot of friends in the few months I've worked here. I especially like the other Town Hall employees," she says.

Janet has a positive outlook on life (a definite advantage when raising seven kids) and that philosophy is reflected in her work. "I think the most important part of my job, is to be cordial and helpful to everyone who comes into the selectmen's office," she explains, adding,"everyone deserves to be treated with respect."

Zoning board denies Autohaus move

Robert E. Guarino's plans to relocate his foreign automobile dealership, Autohaus, were stalled last Thursday night by the Zoning Board of Appeals.

After careful examination, the board denied approval because of the plan's insufficient "live" parking spaces. The dealership, which plans to relocate across the street from the South Shore Bank , provided only 24 of the 116 spaces required in the zoning bylaws for a building of 12,000 square feet.

The plan showed 116 spaces, but they did not meet the special dimensions of the bylaws. Guarino had intended to park the dealership's cars end-to-end into the small spaces.

Loring Jacobs Co., the engineering firm representing Autohaus, questioned applicability of this law in relation to a car dealership, which in their opinion, would never need more than 24 "live" customer parking spaces. Chairperson Myrna Putziger explained that the bylaws do not bend to particular needs of individual business, but are a standard regulation for all to follow.

Guarino was puzzled that his plans were approved in 1979 when first presented to the board and that 24 "live" parking spaces were adequate at that time. Putziger replied, "our predecessors were not as observant." She also added that "whatever relief granted in the past is no longer in effect."

The chairman stated that in order for the board to approve his plan, Guarino must refile his application for a variance regarding the parking spaces, or redraw his plans to conform to the town's bylaws. Guarino agreed to reapply for the variance.

In other business last week, the Zoning Board of Appeals agreed to deliberate on an amendment to a variance sought by Yankee Oil and Gas, Inc. Atty Christopher Sullivan explained to the board that after several attempts tocomply withthe requirements of the Fire and Police Departments, the Board of Health, and the Planning Board, Yankee Oil and Gas could not meet all of the boards' demands in regard to parking by-laws.

From the original 29 parking spaces designed by the corporation and approved by the planning board, only 14 spaces remained intact as a result of the company's compliance with various town department regulations.

Atty. Sullivan told board members that employees presently park adjacent to the tennis courts because of the insufficient number of spaces provided on the property. In a spirit of cooperation with abutters Atty. Sullivan said the corporation will plant Austrian Pines along the edge of the courts, shielding the cars from the neighbors' view. Several neighbors attended the hearing to express their agreement and appreciation of the landscaping plans provided by Yankee Oil and Gas, Inc.

The proposal was taken under advisement by the zoning board.

Seavey relocation

John Seavey, president of Seavey Engineering Assoc., Inc., presented a preliminary site plan last week to the planning board. Seavey plans to construct a two-story, 90,000 square foot building on Route 3A, across the street from the Koko Island restaurant.

Seavey explained his business, currently located at Norfolk Conveyor, manufactures antennas for satellite communications.

Board members expressed their concern about the landscaping of the site. Chairman Chris Bassett requested that the "integrity of the landscape on Route 3A" be elevated beyond the previously low standard. The board also insisted that Seavey have a site plan review checklist.

Within two weeks a more complete site plan will be prepared and presented to the planning board.

An historic perspective of Wompatuck Park

By Judy Gilman

A local naturalist-historian has inventoried the 135-acre parcel of land the state wants to add to Wompatuck State Park holdings and that the federal General Services Administration wants to sell on the open market for $1.5 million.

John Richardson's list of mammals, birds and both common and rare trees and flowers covers several pages of his report and includes sightings of three species of squirrels, beaver, otter, white-tailed deer and a wide variety of birds, including (but not limited to) the glossy ibis, the great horned owl, the merlin, the marsh hawk, the golden eagle and the great blue heron.

In his accompanying letter to Department of Environmental Management (DEM) Commissioner James Gutensohn, Richardson wrote, "I think the most glaring and depressing part of the GSA proposal is that the 135-acre development plot penetrates deeply into a unique tri-park (90-acre Triphammer Pond Reservation, 1,000-acre Thayer-Whitney Woods Reservation, 3,000-acre Wompatuck State Park) conglomerate which has taken 50 years to put together...Unwarranted penetration, as this 135-acre proposal would be, into significant open spaces dramatically diminishes the value of all adjacent open space because the constant invasion onto the open space by persons residing in the adjacent development causes overuse and misuse that spreads outward for hundreds of yards...the 135-acre GSA proposal wil compromise or destroy significant recreational, geological, botanical, scenic, historical and wildlife habitat resources that exist upon or immediately adjacent..."

DEM had hoped to get the entire tract of more than 700 acres, once used as a part of the ammunition depot that once was Wompatuck and later as an area for the U.S. Army Reserve, to add to Wompatuck, one of the largest parks in the greater Boston area. But while GSA is willing to give a large portion to DEM, it wants to retain the 135-acre upland portion to sell for $1.5 million.

Town officials from both Cohasset and Hingham, together with State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray and U.S. Rep Gerry Studds, have become vocal in appealing to the federal government not to go forward with the land sale, which DEM says it can't afford.

The Cohasset water commissioners are concerned about the future of the town's water supply in the park. And Hingham selectman Eugene Bickford last week decried the government's action in taking the land by eminent domain during World War II and then asking for payment for it afterward.

The Wompatuck Advisory Council will have a spe-

☐ News from the Prescott family, namely Lloyd and Evelyn Prescott's daughter Dana. Dana (Prescott) Carroll, a 1970 CHS grad, has been appointed Director of Rhode Island School of Design European Honors Program in Rome, Italy. As a director of this school she will be in charge of all students who are under graduates or doing graduate work in Europe.

Dana was formerly Director of Continuing Education at Rhode Island School of Design in Providence, Rhode Island. She holds her BS degree from Skidmore College and her Masters from Villa Schiffinoia in Florence, Italy.

☐ Congratulations and best wishes to Phil and Mary Jeanette Murray who this week happily reaffirmed their wedding vows after 35 years of marrage at St. Anthony's Church.

☐ Great report out of Cleveland concerning Paul Farren! Paul is going to start at tackle this year, a position that he has surely worked for! Watch the sports page for Paul's name and accomplishments; they will be numerous!

☐ Eric Karcher received an award that is certainly worth talking about...Eric was recently awarded the Bancroft Trophy, a good sportsmanship award that is voted by the lifeguards at the town pool. It was given to him the day the pool closed for the season, and was a real surprise! So much so that Eric's folks weren't even there for the occasion (they were in Maine, at the University of Maine at Orono, to drop off daughter Tammy). Eric is a member of the senior class at CHS.

☐ Although this writer made an error in the announcement of the soccer pancake breakfast (got the day wrong), it didn't matter one bit! The breakfast was reported to be a grand success, and the pancakes received "rave reviews." The general consensus was that it is sure to be an annual event, as everyone benefited! The soccer teams got their sweats, and the town got a yummy breakfast. Here's to the Moms and Dads and players, who all helped to make it a success.

☐ While on the subject of sports, this is it...the week that all teams play their opening games. Get into the habit of watching and supporting your teams, it benefits all! There's nothing like a cheering section to spark a team, and after all their hard work, they deserve it!

☐ Sept. 24th is a day that all golfers should set aside. That is the day chosen for the Jimmy Fund Tournament, an event that has made $11,000 in the last three years. It is a day that is full of golf, followed by a wonderful dinner and a huge raffle. The raffle is another big part of the money that is collected for the Jimmy Fund, so if you have a prize to donate, see one of the following gals that are busy rounding up same: Pat Laugelle, Polly Litchfield, Martha Connelly, or Izzie Salvador. And, if you wish to play in the tournament, call Bob Magner or Clark Chatterton to enter. Do your part to make this the biggest tournament ever!

☐ The Strawberry Parfait Softball Team was going strong when last heard from, they were participating in the semi-finals last weekend. Coach-player Dave Palmerico was very confident, so we're sure that the results were good ones. Maybe we'll hear more next week.

☐ Imagine saying to anyone that you'll be back, you are going to St. Maarten to take an art course! That's exactly what the Art Center if offering this year, when they goto St.Maarten from Jan. 10 to 16. Call the center for details, it sounds like it should be great!

☐ Best of luck to Chris Laugelle as he starts his college career this week...he'll certainly be missed by Cohasset!

☐ Anyone interested in piano lessons should contact Priscilla Daniels, on Beach Street. She has over 25 years of experience in teaching, and is currently playing at Hugo's during the dinner hours Sunday through Wednesdays. Great credent als and a teacher that is really one to make the student learn, give her a call.

☐ Happy be-lated birthday to Bob Page, though we won't give away the age! Two gals that get birthday wishes this month are Jeannine and Karen Pompeo, both September born and both away at college. Best wishes to all.

☐ Joe and Flo Stanford of Jerusalem Road celebrated their 30th anniversary in style Saturday when their ten children treated them to a surprise party in their yard.

Under a yellow tent decorated with balloons and streamers, the family and close friends celebrated and danced well into the night.

The children hosting the party were: Stephen, Anne, Joe, Sean, Kathy, Tommy, Florence, Tara, Liam and Paul.

Joe and Flo will be celebrating again this winter and spring; their daughter Anne is expecting, as is their daughter-in-law, Karen (Joey's wife). Congratulations to all.

☐ Joe Mazza and Kerry Kirkendall will be among the 24 South Shore Conservatory of Music students who were invited to perform at a special reception and supper at the Boston Museum of Fine Arts.

The reception which has been sold out is a benefit for the Museum's Endowment Fund. Mrs. Terrence White of Cohasset, a member of the Museum's Ladies Committee, requested the participation of the Conservatory.

☐ Everyone that heard the "Sports Huddle" show last week heard Walt Sweeney speak, and really enjoyed it. Walt truly has a way with words, and a great radio voice. One caller we know hung up after waiting on hold for more than a half hour, a tribute to both Walt and the show itself.

☐ Mark this Sunday on your calendar, if your love of art needs a treat. There is the First Invitational Exhibition of the Art Complex Museum, located in Duxbury and two of our own artists are included. Richardson White and Dennis Kowal both have sculpture on display and their efforts are said to be spectacular. Don't miss it.

☐ Sunday also marks another event, the "official" end of summer. The last performance of the 1984 season at the Music Circus will be held. By next week, the tent will be down, and the chairs covered, all through until next year-...where did the summer go?

☐ That's it for this week. Please call with your news!

DeSantis chastises action of town boards

He emphasized that individuals serving on these boards have every right to their private opinions regarding the Ward plan, but when acting as representatives of the town, they must fulfill the wishes of the public they serve.

"Be advised of our extreme displeasure with your commission's recent contribution to the MEPA review process," he wrote the Water Commission this week. "By a 9-1 majority this body (town meeting) expressed the will of the town to execute the Ward Plan for waste water disposal. With this vote is a solemn obligation of all town officials to carry out the will of the town."

DeSantis' communication to the Board of Health was similar, and he continued, "Your contribution to the recent MEPA review process required significant legal expense to this town in order to gain full MEPA compliance. Efforts to subvert and deny the will of the town are unacceptable and unfortunately expensive."

As the Sewer Commission noted this week, Cohasset has obtained the approval of the Massachusetts Area Planning Council (MAPC), and the Executive Office of Community Development (EOCD) (a clearinghouse for 50 state agencies). The only remaining hurdle for Cohasset is the state Department of Water Pollution Control (DWPC).

Currently, Cohasset is in the midst of appealing the state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering's (DEQE) refusal to fund the Ward construction grant program.

Progress has been painfully slow in that situation, DeSantis explained, because Cohasset is the first Massachusetts community to appeal a DEQE verdict to Region 1 of the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA).

Car dealer files suit . . .

urged the board to be as stringent with Rosano in their bylaw enforcement as it was when his corporation applied for town permits.

Rosano said after the hearing was held in August, the owner of the Tarzia Corporation wrote to the board and offered his support of the Rosano's business. "Mr. Tarzia called me on the phone and told me personally that he supported what I was trying to do, and that his opinion was misrepresented at the zoning board hearing. He also wrote a letter to the board explaining his side of the story, but they never saw it before theymade their decision August 16," Rosano said.

Although Rosano said he "totally supports" the need for the town's zoning board of appeals, and thinks "they're doing a super, professional job for the town," he feels he was dealt an injustice. His business has been in operation for so many years with prior approval, he said, and now another board wants to close it down. "It doesn't seem very fair," he added.

The board noted in its decision that it was not persuaded "that the Applicant's prior conduct of such business in violation of the bylaw confers upon him status or claim to a special permit. Nor are we persuaded that the issuance by selectmen of a license to carry on such a business has any bearing in the zoning consideration vested solely in this Board."

Rosano explained his side of the story,"fourteen years ago I went to the selectmen and met all their requirements and I was issued a dealer's license to operate the business. And now because of the negligence of the selectmen I later find out I need a special permit. All I want now is a second chance to respond to what they want. I'm not sure what they would want, but I am willing to do anything to salvage this business."

Only one choice

The recent decision of the General Services Administration to put the prime portion of the former Army Reserve land at the end of Leavitt Street on the open market for development shows a sad lack of concern for the health and well-being of area residents, let alone showing any sort of respect for a priceless parcel of wildlands.

Naturalists can tell you of its worth in terms of providing an environment for birds and mammals the early settlers found common, but which have gradually disappeared from most of the New England scene, like otter and beaver.

Airline pilots who are also residents can tell you what it's like, as they take off from Logan, to look down and see the confusion of houses, roads and development and, in the middle, the emerald-like greenness of the Wompatuck area.

Long-time residents can tell you tales of the wooded area when Hingham was still a farming community, linked to the metropolis of Boston only by train.

But the fact remains that the GSA is pulling a fast one in the mode of a shady developer rather than the benign federal government.

Unfortunately, it looks as though they're more interested in a quick $1.5 million which, given the scarcity of easily-buildable land left in either Hingham or Cohasset, some developer will be only too willing to pay in order the make a very substantial financial gain later. More interested in that than in the purity of Cohasset's water supply. More interested in that than in preserving historically and ecologically interesting and unique sites for the ages. And not at all interested in doing the right thing in rounding out the Wompatuck State Park area, itself a great natural resource for the whole greater Boston area.

The land was originally given up to the federal government when it was taken by eminent domain. There was a world war going on, and the area served a purpose. Fortunately, most of it was left completely undisturbed. Now that the federal government no longer wants to pay for the maintenance or the security of the area, they are not content merely to give it back to, in this case, the state Department of Environmental Management. They want their pound of flesh (to mix metaphors), regardless of the effect on the South Shore.

Choices

Next Tuesday is Primary Day, a fact that probably escapes only those who have spent the last six months at the South Pole.

There are choices, lots of choices, in fact, this time around, which is a refreshing change.

But those choices have to be made by voters who go to the polls and express their preference, rather than sit around and complain about the state of things but do nothing further.

Please don't forget to vote next Tuesday: Republican, Democrat, or Independent, the choices are up to you.

Driving lessons a breeze at 15 MPH

By Claire McDonough

Skipper veered slightly off the road, traveled a short distance on the shoulder, then returned to the pavement, all the while managing to look nonchalant.

"Don't ever, ever do that again," I told him through clenched teeth.

He looked injured.

We were on our way to purchase some "narly" pants, a "groovy" shirt, and some "really boss" running shoes, and he was using the opportunity and his newly acquired learner's permit to practice driving.

He interrupted his explanation of why he would be doomed to social ostracism if he didn't also buy a jacket which was "the cat's pajamas," and gave me a wounded glance.

"Dad never yells at me when he lets me drive."

I looked at my white knuckles, then at my son. "Dad lets you drive?"

"Of course. He says I'm a good driver. He lets me do lots of things you don't."

We approached an orange light that turned red as he entered the intersection and Skip accelerated.

"You ran a red light," I informed him calmly, in a voice that was a cross between a dog whistle and the mating call of a diesel engine. "If you pull one more stunt like that I'm going to burn your learner's permit."

He sighed. "Dad said it was o.k. to go through red lights if they're orange when you see them."

"Dad can afford to. He already wears nitroglycerin patches all the time."

"All I know," Skip retorted, "is that Dad never yells at me. Unlike certain other people I could mention."

His face registered exasperation. "Will you look at how close that idiot is driving in front of me?"

"It's too bad you never see a policeman when you really need one," I agreed.

We made his purchases, less one "cat's pajamas" jacket, and returned home, he humming along with a car radio which could have attracted the attention of a police department three towns away, and I in tight-lipped silence.

When we entered the house, the Dragon was in a surly mood. "I went to the 4:30 Mass," he informed me.

"How come the readings are always from Revelations and they always say terrible things about the Dragon?"

"I don't think you should take it personally," I told him.

"Oh yeah? Then how come they never say anything about Flora or Fauna?"

I patted his paw. "Look, Darling, I've been out driving with our youngest son, and he tells me that you let him drive a lot during the week."

"As often as I can," he agreed.

"He also tells me that you never yell at him."

"I try not to," the Dragon replied. "I remember what it was like when I was learning to drive. When people yelled at me, it only made me nervous and more likely to make mistakes."

"You don't even yell when he drives in the shoulder or when he goes through red lights?"

"As I said, I try not to. What good does it do? By the time I've recovered enough to yell the crisis is over, anyway."

I looked at him with new respect.

"I don't think you have to worry about what it says in Revelations," I told him. "Clearly you're a saint. A positive saint. You're sure you don't even yell when he goes through red lights?"

"Positive. Of course he rarely goes through them when he's with me."

"How do you manage that?" I asked.

"Simple. It's easy to stop when you're driving 15 miles an hour, and that's as fast as I let him get. Even a saint has his limits.

Hazardous waste day Sept 22

By Victoria Grayken

Surprisingly enough, there are many potentially dangerous pollutants in residential homes. Hazardous waste materials that are improperly disposed of can seep into the ground water and contaminate our Town's water supply.

To protect the quality of Cohasset's water for the future, the Hazardous Material Advisory Committee has contracted S.C.A. Chemical Services to collect hazardous wastes at the Town Hall parking lot Saturday, September 22, beginning at 8:30 a.m.

S.C.A. Chemicals is licensed by the Environmental Protection Agency (E.P.A.) and the Commonwealth of Massachusetts to collect, transport and dispose of hazardous materials. Since S.C.A. accepts full responsibility for the hazardous wastes collected, only Cohasset residents (not commercial businesses) will be allowed to take advantage of the collection day.

Hazardous wastes are caustic, flammable, toxic, corrosive or otherwise chemically reactive materials. Common household hazardous wastes include: drain cleansers, oven cleaners, toilet bowl cleansers, polishes and waxes, solvents (eg: nail polish remover), wood stains and preservatives, pool chemicals (chlorine, PH adjust), photographic chemicals (fixers, developers), weed killers, pesticides (insect killers, rodent killers, fungicides), old medicines, paints (oil base), paint thinner, used motor oil, antifreeze, and battery acids.

If you are not sure that something is hazardous, look for key words on the label: "Caution", "Combustible", "Flammable", "Harmful", "Poison". If you are still not certain about a particular item, BRING IT IN!

The collection day is a unique opportunity for Cohasset residents to have these wastes properly

Divorce counseling developed for students

Separation and divorce is a family problem with far-reaching consequences. Not only the parents, but their siblings are deeply affected by the choice to divide the family.

In an attempt to come to grips with a social dilemma that is widespread, the Cohasset schools will be offering a professional counseling group for those students who have been traumatized by divorce or separation.

Based on the recommendation of Guidance Director John Leary, the school committee decided Monday night to implement a new program, in which small groups of students in the junior and senior high school will initiate discussions about problems they confront as siblings of parents who have decided to live apart.

Leary explained there is a need for such a program, and noted it is the children from homes whose parents have suddenly decided to separate, or have endured an unhealthful divorce, who are most severely affected by the trauma of the situation.

All minors participating in the junior and senior high school counseling program will need the consent of their parents, the committee decided, as an assurance against future liability. An attorney will review the program and determine whether the school system may be held liable for allowing a minor to participate without parental consent.

Leary presented the proposed program to the school committee before beginning the sessions. He wanted to inform all school officials of the program and its intentions.

When asked whether there was a need for such a program in the elementary grades, Leary replied that there is a great demand for such a program. Deer Hill students in particular, he said, would benefit from such a program, and, at budget time, he will be requesting a guidance counselor for that school, he forewarned the committee.

According to the guidance director, counselors Mary Babaian and Edward Leonard and himself will be leading the discussion groups. There will be two groups, one for the junior high students and a separate session for the senior high students. Each group will meet once per six-day cycle.

Leary said the program will begin as soon as possible.

According to the letter which will sent home to parents, "there are many issues common to children of divorced or separated parents even though the circumstance of the separation may be very different. Many, particularly during the first two years of divorce process, experience difficulty in coping with their fears, their sadness, and their anger; consequently stress manifests itself in changes of attitude and behavior. Some have a hard time concentrating on school work, some tend to withdraw from their normal activities, because they feel so different because of the divorce, some become stoic, some experience strong feelings of guilt. Whatever the case may be, small group discussions are a productive way to deal with these and other concerns."

Each parent who consents to the group counseling must sign a permission slip and the student must return it to the school.

When asked by committee members if the group will eventually expand to include children from all single-parent homes, Leary answered that may be developed into an additional group sometime in the future.

Committee member Jack Langmaid noted it was difficult for him to distinguish between those youngsters whose parents are separated from those whose parents are divorced. "Both situations are acromonious and provoke the same emotions from the student," he said.

Director Leary said he expects between 14 and 16 students per group, a "manageable" number in which they will be able to hold meaningful dialogue.

The committee voted unanimously in favor of the new project, recognizing the need to begin a similar program in the lower elementary grades sometime in the future. Leary noted the counseling sessions will not incur any additional costs to the school system.

Old Colony Boy Scouts appointment

The Executive Board of the Old Colony Council, Boy Scouts of America, has appointed Wilbur Garside of Norwell as District Chairman for the Old Mills District.

Robert Hill of Rockland has been named District Commissioner. Both men have been involved with scouting for over ten years.

Old Mills District serves over 2000 youth in the towns of Abington, Cohasset, Hanson, Hingham, Hull, Norwell, Rockland, Scituate, and Whitman.

Garside was previously district commissioner and district advancement chairman. Mr. Hill has held posts in Rockland as troop committee chairman, cubmaster, and unit commissioner.

The district administration and operations organize and supports program scout units and carries out the policies and programs of the council.

Working closely with the district organization is C. William Roberts, District Executive, of Pembroke.

The commissioner staff is responsible for rechartering the district's 68 Scout units on time and at full strength. The staff is composed of experienced men and women trained in the ideals of scouting character, citizenship, and fitness. Their role is to help units succeed.

Commissioners serving in the communities of the Old Mills District are: Jack Burns and Richard McCollem of Abington, William Sides and George Smith of Hanover; and Richard Keogh and Julie King of Hanson.

Assistant district commissioner Paul Taylor of Rockland handles handicap and special needs within the district. Serving as roundtable commissioners are Paul Peterson of Hull and William Labradie of Rockland.

Anyone wishing further information or interested in helping at the commissioner level may contact the above scouting volunteers in their community.

DeSantis' letter

(This is an open letter written by Sewer Commission Chairman Charles DeSantis to the Water Commission and Board of Health. Ed.)

Our society adapts to new realities through the process of conflict. A process which stimulates debate and thought. When a new concept is introduced, a conflicting position is defined while weaknesses are probed. Eventually as in Cohasset, the healthy conflict is resolved when informed people, acting as our Legislative Body, establish the will of the town by town-meeting vote. The majority rules. While eternally respecting the right of the minority — a minority which has the potential and free access to the power of persuasion to eventually become a majority itself.

The town boards which execute the will of the town, expressed by town-meeting vote, have a sacred responsibility to fulfill this obligation. On June 19, town meeting, by a 9-1 majority, directed this town to secure federal and state funding while appropriating the full Cohasset share of funds for the design and construction of our selected waste water disposal plan. Although the vote directed the Sewer Commission to execute this project, it demands the cooperation and enthusiasm of all town executive boards to ensure its success.

Most are aware that our project has met with resistance from the State DEQE. Consequently, in order to secure our rights under federal law, we have exercised our duty to appeal to the EPA. This process, in order to successfully respond to the mandate of town meeting, requires the best efforts of all town boards.

Concurrently, with this appeal, our project was recently reviewed by an independent state agency, MEPA. This agency attempts to identify areas of significant environmental impact. And if found, the agency may request an additional engineering study to mitigate its environmental concerns.

Unfortunately, this agency (MEPA) was provided by Board of Health and Water Commission materials which expressed lack of support for the town's waste water disposal project. Fortunately, this input did not result in an additional costly study for our town. However, it did require additional legal assistance and its attendant costs for the town to counter the contributions of these boards. On behalf of the voters of this town, I strongly resent activities like the above which seek to subvert the will of town meetings. If a board cannot assist positively, then I ask that the boards do nothing.

If board members, individually and sincerely, disagree with the town's objectives, I and everyone can respect their positions. You have the cherished right to speak out as an individual. However, as a board your duty is to assist your town no matter how personally incompatible that task may be.

The Sewer Commission is delighted to assist the Water Department in its water main construction program and in its efforts to establish a sound Watershed Protection District. Likewise, we are always ready to provide assistance and manpower to aid the Board of Health in the execution of its responsibilities. We expect similar cooperation from these two boards. Our community cannot afford otherwise.

U. S. Senate Candidates

Elliot Richardson

Elliot Richardson is counting on the largest possible turnout in the Sept. 18 primaries. The man who has been Cabinet Secretary to five Presidents, Attorney General, clerk to two Supreme Court Justices, head of United Nations Association of the U.S., and a string of other prestigious posts, admits he is in a tough race against Ray Shamie for the GOP slot for the Senatorial seat being vacated by Paul Tsongas.

Richardson, who has been to six Republican National Conventions, made news last month by refusing to support the Republican Party platform in Dallas, saying it did not adequately reflect the needs and desires of the people of Massachusetts and that it did not address four priorities of his campaign: preservation of peace and avoidance of nuclear war; action to reduce the federal budget deficit; keeping industry competitive, and environmental action to curb the problems of acid raid and hazardous waste.

He also refused to conform to the platform because it did not endorse the Equal Rights Amendment and because it seeks to "politicize the selection of federal judges."

In a telephone interview this week, he expounded on those priorities.

"The objective of arms control is to contain the arms race, which is becoming dangerous and carries the risk of introducing destabilizing elements. My approach is that we need to prevent conflict, to restrain the arms race, to reduce the excessive nuclear stockpiling. If we were able to reduce it to half, we would still have more than six times the capability to destroy the earth." He said he would seek a coherent foriegn policy that would balance arms control and improve international trade. He also said he would call on the U.N. whenever possible, "and use US shuttle diplomacy only in the end."

Richardson puts high priority on containing the federal deficit and acknowledges that taxes may have to be used "as a last resort" to balance the budget.

The total deficity may reach over $600 billion in the next three years, he said. "To reduce that, and I think it's urgent to reduce it, defense has to bare its share of reductions." He supports lowering the rate of increase in defense spending from the current annual increase of nine percent to equal the rate of economic growth, currently about four percent. He said reductions could come in other areas, such as cultural subsidies, and would look for more savings by following the recommendations of the Grace Commission, a group of business leaders which has recommended more effective management of government, pointing out a potential savings of $90 billion.

"After we have done everything we can, there may remain a significant deficit," he said. "By that route, we may have to look at the revenue side." Shamie has campaigned against increased taxes, Richardson said. "He says we can grow our way out of the deficit. But if the gap is to be closed, based on his figures of $20 billion in revenue for each one percent of economic growth, we would need a sustained growth of 10 percent. We've never had that or anything like it.

"Everyone is for economic growth and nobody wants taxes. But to dismiss the need for additional revenue by saying we can continue growth is...it's the sort of thing you might expect from a used car salesman."

Richardson has issued a 32-page report on environmental concerns including acid rain, hazardous waste, low level radioactive waste, energy conservation and preservation of Georges Bank. It is, he says, a solid paper with considerable detail on pressing environmental issues.

He also has a 14-point program on maintaining the state's industrial competitiveness which, he says, is based on some government/private partnerships to stay ahead in developments. "Here the federal government can have a clear role to sponsor basic research, which is not apt to attract private capital." Applied research and training programs could be sponsored jointly by private industry and government, he said, and he would streamline export licenses and maintain tax credits for research and development.

"It is a tight race," Richardson admits of his campaign against Ray Shamie. "We're working hard to reach voters, and we're counting on the largest possible turnout."

Ray Shamie

Republican Ray Shamie makes his second bid for the U.S. Senate this fall, this time for the seat being surrendered by Paul Tsongas.

Two years ago Shamie's contender was Sen. Edward Kennedy.

But this time Shamie meets Elliot Richardson in the primary. Shamie categorizes himself as a Reagan Republican. Of Richardson's candidacy he says, "We'll have a spokesman for big government and control if Elliot wins.

Shamie says more money should be kept back here "at home in Massachusetts. Let the people decide how to spend it. I'm for limited government involvement. A victory for me means that."

Viewed as a maverick in party politics two years ago,

U.S. Senate Candidates

Shamie now has his place in the race as a man who's no longer a novice at seeking high office. He says he has essentially the same backers as he had two years ago. And he expects to win the primary with the voting power from Democrats and Independents as well as Republicans, those who choose to defeat the notion of "Washington knows best," in favor of stronger state rule.

"I represent," said Shamie, "a clear choice to people. I haven't changed any. I always spoke about the issues, not personal matters. My campaign strategy hasn't changed. But people are not used to a non-professional politician.

If he were elected, he was asked, what differences should voters expect to see. "There should be one year from now a stronger Senate and Congress and we must get the government spending under control, allow the states to keep more money."

Another difference Shamie would expect to see, and this is based on his belief that Reagan will be re-elected, is that a Senator from Massachusetts will prove more persuasive in getting money and jobs for this state. He cites the case of a ship that could have been harbored in Boston's Naval yard and would have brought 3000 jobs. "And yet that went to New York Harbor," he said, in spite of efforts from Democratic Senators Tsongas and Kennedy.

Support can lead to communication and that, he says, can lead to a more favorable situation economically for Massachusetts. He does support Reagan.

Ray Shamie sees strict adherence to party politics as waning. "People are migrating to choosing the candidate rather than a party."

A division in the Republican party has evolved, he said, since the '82 election when Shamie was unopposed in the Primary. "The future of the Republicans are truly at stake," he said. "I expect to win and the party of working men and women will have a spokesman from here."

John Kerry

Lt. Governor John Kerry has been in the public spotlight for ten years as a district attorney, an advocate for veterans seeking to end the Vietnam war, a public affairs commentator for Channel 5, lieutenant governor and now he is seeking the Democratic nomination for U.S. Senate.

He is running on a campaign platform to reduce military spending but stressing a nuclear freeze, de-escalation of the U.S. involvement in Central America and a commitment to domestic programs which suffered cutbacks during the Reagan administration.

Besides his views on the Vietnam War, Kerry is known for his work as the First Assistant District Attorney in Middlesex County.

Under Kerry's leadership, Middlesex County reduced a backlog of criminal cases from 11,000 to 228 in 18 months. Within a year, he secured more than $4 million in federal grants, more money than any D.A.'s office received in a year.

Besides investigating the Somerville pinball extortion case which led to the jailing of one of the top organized crimes figures in New England, Kerry started a rape counseling, and victim-witness assistance programs and established organized crime and white-collar crime units.

WOMEN'S RIGHTS

As Lt. Governor, Kerry worked to amend the state's Victim's Compensation Law to ensure rape victims recover any and all medical costs and helped to establish the first rural daycare in the state.

Kerry also helped to start Training Inc. to give unemployed women and minorities the skills they need to enter the workforce.

As a U.S. Senator, Kerry says he will fight for passage of the Equal Rights Amendment; halt the erosion of maternal, child, health care, daycare and school lunch programs and will sponsor legislation to encourage business to establish daycare centers.

Kerry will sponsor legislation extending Title IX's protection of equal rights in education so that if one school's program discriminates, the entire school would lose federal funding.

Kerry also supports federal funding for education and job training programs for women, especially displaced homemakers.

EDUCATION

"Adequate funding is a must. Every public school in the U.S. must have the money to provide excellent teaching to all children in a broad range of subjects. We cannot do that today because poor communities cannot fund adequate education from property taxes.

"In Massachusetts, revenue limits mean that most communities - poor or not - are increasingly unable to provide the kind of education we should expect," Kerry said.

He favors the goal of moving to one-third federal spending of education from the current level of eight percent.

Kerry believes money will not resolve all of the problems of the educational system. Local control is important because it maximizes the involvement of many people, is democratic and ensures public education will respond to the ideals of the community.

He also stresses in his education platform that inservice teacher training must be made available to all teachers. "Meeting the challenge of the future is also why we must pay teachers the kind of salaries that are necessary to continue to attract and retain good teachers for our public schools. Paying teachers will rekindle respect for teaching so that bright young people and productive experienced people continue to want to be teachers."

WORKING PEOPLE CONCERNS

To move toward economic justice and full employment Kerry supports re-establishing and achieving the full employment goal; expanding federal support for education, training and retraining with a special emphasis on workers affected by plant closings and insists that the minimum wage be retained for all jobs without exception.

Kerry wants to restore budget cuts which have made it difficult for OSHA and EPA to keep workplaces safe and will oppose the taxation of health care benefits.

Kerry endorses health care legislation U.S. Senator Edward Kennedy proposed. These include providing incentives to hospitals to admit more patients by implementing the flat fee for services rendered.

Kerry wants to provide economic incentives to consumers to choose lower cost health insurance and require employers to offer more varied health insurance coverage at a reduced cost to employees.

The federal government should encourage the further development of HMO's to serve the elderly. The federal government could institute special incentives for states to develop plans to increase Medicare enrollment in HMOs.

DEFENSE

Kerry believes it is time for Congress and the administration to plan for the country's defense needs rather than spending indiscriminately on new weapons systems.

He says $45 to 53 billion can be cut from the Reagan Defense budget this year. Some of the cuts include cancelling the MX Missile,B-1 Bomber, Anti-satellite system, Star Wars program and reducing by 50 percent the Tomahawk Missile.

He also supports cancelling binary chemical weapons, AH-64 helicopters and the Division Air Defense Gun.

David Bartley

U.S. Senate candidate David Bartley feels all the candidates for the seat being vacated by Paul Tsongas share similar views on all issues--except taxes.

"We all have the "me too" issues: we all want to eliminate acid rain, we all want the two superpowers to agree to a nuclear arms treaty, and we're all essentially the same on Central America," Bartley explained. "But I've had the courage to say the Democrats can manage the economy without raising taxes. And I've proven that with my experience."

The experience Bartley speaks of is his former role as State Secretary of Administration and Finance to then-Governor Edward King in 1982. In his year in the position, Bartley produced a budget with a surplus of $42 million, while allocating a record-high $415 million in aid to public higher education and a record-high $2.25 billion in new local aid to cities and towns.

U. S. Senate Candidates

A native of Holyoke, Bartley earned an associate degree in liberal arts at Holyoke Community College in 1954, and then earned bachelor's (government) and master's (education) degrees at U/Mass-Amherst.

Bartley served as state representative from Holyoke from 1963 to 1975, and was Speaker of the House of Representatives from 1969 to 1975. Since 1975 he has been president of Holyoke Community College, except the one year leave of absence he took to serve under Governor King's administration.

Bartley's campaign for the Senate has centered around the tax issue, for that is where he stands apart from and above the other candidates, particularly fellow Democrats John Kerry and James Shannon.

"There is an important difference between myself and my Democratic opponents," Bartley recently told the South Shore Chamber of Commerce. "I will not support a tax increase. They will. The choice is yours."

A strong supporter of the Mondale-Ferraro ticket, Bartley has spoken out against Mondale's plans to increase taxes to reduce the federal deficit. "I could not disagree more with the Presidential nominee of my party over this fundamental public policy issue," he says.

Bartley's own formula for reducing the deficit includes "cutting useless military expenditures, cutting agricultural subsidies and closing loopholes in the tax structure."

Bartley also favors:

--increased aid to schools and to lower-income persons to make college affordable to all.

--passage of programs to clean-up and protect the environment, including a sulfur reduction program to combat acid rain; reauthorization of the Clean Air Act and the Clean Water Act; protecting fish and wildlife resources from the effects of off-shore drilling, acid rain and habitat destruction; and "adequate funding for the Environmental Protection Agency to do its job."

--legislation pertaining to women's rights, including: passage of the Equal Rights Amendment; economic equity in the workplace; retraining for displaced and re-entry workers; equity in pension plans, insurance programs, and the social security system; and access to capital through the Small Business Adminstration and banks.

--Bartley also favors a national program to make health care affordable for all citizens, supports a medicaid program that guarantees all needy persons access to quality health care, and is opposed to any "wholesale cuts in social programs which demand unfair sacrifices from those who can least afford them--the poor, elderly, women, children and minority groups.

--for business, Bartley says he will work for stricter enforcement of trade laws and agreements, and supports the repair and improvement of highways, bridges, waterways, railways and airports.

--Bartley also supports strong anti-crime measures (including capital punishment); the build-up of some defense programs (the Trident Submarine, Stealth Bomber and Minuteman project) before a nuclear freeze is negotiated; and is opposed to federal funding of abortion.

Michael Connolly

In order to get a feel for the people's needs, U.S. Senate candidate Michael J. Connolly has taken a number of vacation days from his post as Secretary of State to work among the people.

Since June, he has travelled to all corners of the state to work for a day in many diverse occupations: he has unloaded fish on the docks of a seafood company in New Bedford; worked as a policeman in Shrewsbury; served food at a senior citizen complex in Quincy; worked at a hazardous waste facility in Framingham; taught classes at Boston Latin School; and worked for a day at other jobs including a farm, a shoe manufacturing company and a deli.

At each one of these "work days," Connolly has addressed the needs of the groups he has worked with.

He told the elderly, for example, that he opposes any reduction in social security benefits and will fight to implement an income base for all elderly Americans. He also favors increasing the meals program for poor elderly, increasing federal assistance for older homeowners facing mortgage foreclosure, and is opposed to mandatory retirement ages. He also favors a bill to control medical costs.

For minorities, Connolly says he would push to ensure federal programs designed to assist minorities and minority-owned businesses are carried out to their intent, and stronger enforcement of equal opportunity laws.

He has told fishermen he would fight to reduce their profit losses by endorsing the use of import quotas to limit the number of fish brought into the country. He also favors the development of an agreement between the U.S. and Canada over fishing rights along George's Bank, and also favors a moratorium on the leasing of sensitive areas along George's Bank for offshore oil drilling.

On the subject of crime, Connolly told Shrewsbury policemen he favors restrictions on private handgun ownership and would sponsor and support legislation outlawing the manufacture, sale and transfer of armor-piercing bullets in the U.S. He also supports restrictions on the use of opaque glass in motor vehicles.

Connolly graduated from Boston Latin School in 1965, and earned a bachelor's degree in political science from Holy Cross in 1969. Connolly earned a degree in law in 1976 from the New England School of Law.

He taught mathematics at Boston Latin School (1969, 1970-72), was a state representative for Ward 20 from 1973 to 1979, and since 1979 has been Secretary of State. Connolly resides in Roslindale with his wife Lynda and their four children.

On national issues, Connolly favors:

--Negotiating a bilateral freeze on nuclear weapons with the Soviets, followed by mutual arsenal reductions. "The most important goal of every American, and especially every elected official, must be the pursuit of meaningful peace," Connolly says. ". . . A freeze (must be) put into place NOW before more advanced and more destabilizing weapons are built."

--Passage of the Equal Rights Amendment. Connolly also supports the concept of equal pay for comparable work; favors a program to train and place women in managerial and technical jobs; opposes Reagan's budget cuts which disproportionately affect women and children; endorses legislation to expand state child support programs and for stricter enforcement of support payments by absent parents.

--On taxes, Connolly would work to close tax loopholes that benefit special interests; reform tax laws which benefit the wealthy at the expense of low and middle-income Americans; establish a minimum corporate tax payment; and reform the new tax index schedule to take effect Jan. 1, 1985.

--Connolly would work to better health and welfare programs by:extending unemployment insurance to 9 million jobless presently ineligible to collect benefits; increase food stamp benefits by 25 to 30 percent; restore eligibility levels for school nutrition programs to previous levels; and increasing funding for preventative health care.

--On the environment, Connolly favors: legislation to reduce sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxide emissions which pollute the air, as well as other controls to reduce acid rain; expanding programs to clean-up hazardous waste and develop means for recycling hazardous waste.

--Connolly has also said one of his priorities as a senator will be to implement a national drug and alcohol education program, starting in the primary grades.

Jim Shannon

At 32 Jim Shannon has logged six years with the U.S. Congress and the same number of years on that body's powerful Ways and Means Committee.

A native of Lawrence, Shannon attended Johns Hopkins University and was an attorney when he gained the Congressional seat in '78 as the youngest of the 96th Congress.

But it's the Senate spot he's after, because, "The Senate is the place where you can best change the direction of the country," he says.

Democrat Shannon says the arms race is out of control, the U.S. is in Central America, involved in a war in which it has no business and the place he can help turn it around is the Senate.

"I have worked on both International and bread and butter issues, like bringing jobs to my district. There's been an agressive revamping of Lowell's image. He's proud of that and takes a portion of the credit for upbeat results of that effort. He says he's worked on equal opportunity, through the National Organization for Women, and on child support enforcement.

As for this area, the relatively undemanding section of the Senate district, the South Shore, he says he'd plan to be as accessible as a U.S. Senator as he has been to constituents as a U.S. Congressman.

"I would ask voters," he said, "to pay attention to where we (the candidates)) have put our time and efforts. There's work I've done on the nuclear freeze, for example."

Shannon recently released what he called "An Agenda for Massachusetts," outlining policy on tax, health care, economic revitalization and education.

Of that, he said, "It is not enough for Democrats to simply talk about solutions to our problems, we need to develop ways of paying for the solutions we propose. That's why the cornerstone of my agenda is a major tax proposal, which represents an alternative . . . ."

Shannon sits on the Social Security and Health Subcommittees of the House Ways and Means, in which legislation affecting the elderly is debated.'

Said the Democrat, who'll face John Kerry, David Bartley and Michael Connolly next week, "We have an obligation to our senior citizens which our government must honor."

State Senator

Anna Doherty

This interview with the Third Norfolk and Plymouth County Republican State Senate candidate Anna Doherty, should have been published in last week's Mariner*. She is running unopposed for the Republican nomination, but will be facing the Democratic nominee in the November election. Ed.*

As the single Republican candidate in the race for the Norfolk-Plymouth State Senate seat, Anna Doherty meets no contention in the Sept. 18 primary.

Democrats Rick Walsh and Bill Golden will settle the issue of who her opponent will be in November.

The three are of course vying for the seat being surrendered by State Sen. Allan McKinnon. And it's Doherty who points out that the State Senate seat she's after belonged to the Republic party for many years before McKinnon got it in the 70s.

An attorney, Doherty has lived in Marshfield nearly 46 years and has been an active force in the Republican party as well as a former candidate for the state representatives seat captured by Frank Hynes in 1983.

She said the three running for the Senate do not disagree on major issues. The differences lie instead, she says, on the approach to solution.

Doherty favors the reconstruction of the Neponset River Bridge as one of the solutions needed in the transportation woes pined in unison by South Shore candidates for all offices.

"I also feel strongly that education in the state must be brought back to what it should be," says Doherty. "Many people have felt they had to send their kids to private schools.

That's one of the issues in which she views her solutions as being different from those proffered by Democratic candidates.

"We have to have local control and standards and teachers need to undergo a review process as people do in private industry. The spending must come from the local level. We should return the money from the state to the towns and let them decide how to spend it."

She would prefer, for example, that establishment of basic salary for teachers come through local town boards, rather than through state mandate. She views the state issuance as "playing havoc with contracts."

A proponent of Proposition 2½, Doherty says the law has done its work in no longer leaving the burden for basic services falling entirely on real estate taxes.

But state taxes need revamping she said, and an eye toward protection of higher education must be part of that effort to insure youngsters can afford to study for graduate and undergraduate degrees.

Anna Doherty supports the party's Reagan-Bush ticket but not with unqualified differences in important concepts. She is pro-choice, a supporter of the ERA.

But she is also entirely Republican. It is that party, she said, that was made up of competent women and she believes the efforts of strong women politicians can win it back for greater balance and representation.

There has been no woman senator from the Norfolk Plymouth area that comes to memory.

"I won't back away from the party and leave it to the far right," she said. "The Republicans have been a party of women and I think we can get it back."

Of voters. Doherty would ask a good look at each candidate's basic philosophies and believes . . . 'that's where the differences are.'

One of these basics, she says, is this: "Local elected officials know best how to run their town. Adding more bureaucracy from the state won't solve problems. It will give 20 to 25 people good lifetime jobs and it'll spend money."

Anny Doherty also sees the balance of Republican philosophy at the state level as being long overdue, bordering on unhealthy. She intends to provide some of that balance.

Committee reviews summer credits

The school committee has one month to decide whether to clamp down and tighten course requirements at summer school. This major revision will be aimed at discouraging those students who habitually attend the six-week course instead of making a sincere effort to pass the course given during the school year.

Guidance director John Leary said although the revision would affect only 10-12 percent of the student population, it is time for Cohasset to fall in line with other school systems regarding summer school. Currently, a student who attends and passes a course at the summer session receives full course credit. The alteration would change it to half-credit in certain instances, after the successful completion of the course.

The proposed credit reduction would help disuade those who believe that they may be continually absent from school throughout the nine-month year, and "make it up" in a brief, six-week summer session, Leary explained.

The recommendation for the proposed policy change has the enthusiastic support of the high school faculty senate, he added.

Two committee members, chairman Joseph Nedrow and member Richard Conley said they were against the formation of the policy. Although a small number of students would be affected by the change, those are the students who Cohasset schools should be assisting.

The two members said they were opposed to constructing "roadblocks" before these borderline students, whose only goal is to graduate and join the employment force. Cohasset should be attempting to help these kids graduate, not by limiting the ways in which they may complete their high school education. By further restricting graduating requirements, Nedrow said, many of these students may drop out without a diploma. "If all they want in life is to graduate and look for a job at McDonald's, then we should give them every chance to do that," Nedrow said.

Member Diana Kornet refuted that argument, stating, "it's about time a diploma from Cohasset High School started to mean something again." She favored the restrictions imposed on summer make-up courses, saying it would be an impetus for all students to study and pass the required courses given in the normal school calendar year.

According to the proposed policy, a student will not be allowed to make up a course or point deficiency in any summer program unless that student has achieved a minimum numerical grade of 50 in that course. This portion of the policy is designed to distinguish between those students who honestly attempted to pass a course, and those who were chronically absent or never made an effort to pass the course.

The second portion of the policy states that a student will not be allowed to accumulate more than 10 points through a summer session course over a four-year period.

And the final segment states that Cohasset High School will award only half credit for any summer school course taken to make up a course or point deficiency.

Supt. Eugene Crowell warned that some sort of "escape clause" should be implemented within the policy to referr to a "special case" student. Upon the request of the parents, this student could be reviewed by the guidance department and administrators before a decision is rendered whether the policy relates to the particular student.

As Leary explained, the change would only effect those students attending summer school to make up for credit lost during the school year, not for those attending enrichment courses, or have a legitimate reason for attending the six-week program. Cohasset does not have a summer program and all Cohasset students must attend a session in towns such Insurance Companies Compete to Win Homeowners with Lower Rates.

"Now, homeowners can generally get increased coverage and pay less for it," according to Mary Porter of Whitman's Doran & Mason Insurance Agency.

Interviewed at her Bridgewater home, Ms. Porter said, "My job is to see that my clients have all the facts they need to buy insurance wisely. Right now, the fact is that you can probably duplicate your present homeowner's coverage at a lower cost — or — increase your coverage without increasing your cost."

"You can still get good, personal service with your low rates, too," Ms. Porter added. Doran & Mason has a team system. "Each of my clients can phone my office teammate any time a question arises or a problem occurs. We have enough people for that, and our size makes us important to the companies we represent. Even difficult claims can be handled more easily."

"I'll take the time to explain the details to you and I'll get to know you well enough to understand what insurance you need. I don't press;" she concluded, "if you have all the information you need, you'll make the right decisions." COMPARE: PETER Y. FLYNN VS. STUDDS ON THE ISSUES.

PETER Y. FLYNN

"I want you to forget about the affair and the censure, and look at my record and my positions, and compare them to his record and his positions."

— August 9, 1984

GERRY E. STUDDS

"If you have a seat as safe as mine, you can get away with anything."

The Patriot Ledger — June 25, 1984

"The Federal Budget and the National Debt"

PETER Y. FLYNN

"The national debt is a very important problem facing America.

The answer to the national debt is not taking away essential services from the elderly and veterans, or in unnecessary tax increases . . . the answer is to cut wasteful spending . . . starting with Congress' own budget.

I endorse and will work toward the adoption of Proposition One, the national bi-partisan effort to stop the escalation of the national debt, and to bring the national budget into 'balance.'

We can no longer 'get away with' mortgaging our children's futures with reckless spending today."

GERRY E. STUDDS

"No one has any idea how to balance the budget!"
The Marshfield Mariner - August 1, 1984

Studds voted with Ronald Reagan to add 110.1 billion dollars to the national debt, thereby extending the deficit to 1.49 trillion dollars.

CQ Roll Call 4983 - November 8, 1983

Studds voted to reduce the debt by increasing taxes by 181 billion dollars.

CQ Roll Call 75 - April 12, 1984

Studds voted to decrease medicare, veteran's programs, and other benefits by 3.9 billion in fiscal 1985 through 1987.

CQ Roll Call 75 - April 12, 1984

"Social Security and Elder Affairs"

Will vote for measures which will guarantee the solvency of the Social Security System.

Will make sure our older Americans receive all the benefits they are entitled to, when they are entitled to them.

Will vote against any measure which would add non-essential services to the already strained system.

Have a full-time staff person working entirely on elderly affairs.

Studds voted with Ronald Reagan and against Congressman Claude Pepper's amendment to the Social Security system that would have ensured the continued solvency of the Social Security System.

Studds voted with Ronald Reagan and against Congressman Claude Pepper (and the rest of the members of the Massachusetts delegation) on an amendment that raises the retirement age of Social Security from 65 to 67.

Studds voted to extend the Social Security system into new, non-elderly areas such as adoption, foster care, and children's insurance — making it more difficult for Social Security to meet its financial commitment to older Americans.

"Crime and Drug Abuse"

Peter Y. Flynn is tough on crime.

As State Representative, Flynn was the Chairman of the House Committee on Public Safety.

Flynn favors mandatory sentencing for drug pushers and those who commit crimes against the elderly.

Flynn favors increased funding for the Coast Guard to fight the influx of illegal drugs.

Flynn supports the national 21-year-old drinking age along with the Comprehensive Crime Control Bill.

Flynn believes that the voters of the Tenth District need a Congressman who'll fight crime.

Studds voted against the creation of a committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control.

CQ Roll Call 9 - February 25, 1981

Failed to vote on a grant program to the states to help them combat crime.

CQ Roll Call 88 - May 9, 1983

Studds voted against allowing U. S. Armed Forces personnel to participate in illegal drug seizures where necessary.

CQ Roll Call 210 - July 15, 1981

LEADERSHIP and INTEGRITY matter,

Varsity Football

The varsity football team took part in a jamboree Friday night at Middleboro to help raise money for the league. Cohasset played two teams, each for a quarter. After a quarter of playing Hull, Cohasset lost 0 to 7. In a quarter against East Bridgewater, Cohasset tied 6 to 6. During the quarter, Floyd Hardwick scored on a 60 yard run. Jackie Cooper, Danny Curran, Mark Lahive, and Liam Stanford all played excellent defense for Cohasset.

Last Wednesday, in a scrimmage against Norton, Cohasset's offense moved the ball well, and everyone had a good day. Troy Chatterton a quarterback, controlled the offense very well, and Mark Lahive also had a good game.

During the preseason, Cohasset did very well in scrimmages offensivley and defensively. They became better. Coach Phil Pisano says, "I will be counting on Jeff Brown and Jay Contis to anchor the line this year."

Saturday, Cohasset will open their season at Hanover. This game will prove to be a big challenge for Cohasset.

Girls Varsity Soccer

The girls' soccer team improved greatly in their pre season and are looking much better as they begin their season this week.

Cohasset had two scrimmages, one against Hingham which they lost, 4 to 2 and another which they won, 3 to 1. In these scrimmages senior, Joanie Chisom, backed Cohasset very well, and senior, Sara Seavey, improved her game tremendously. Janet DiGorolamo has also played very well during preseason. Newcomers, Caitlin Staunton and Kerri Kirkendall have both shown much

School committee briefs

Afterschool tennis

Despite warnings from Supt. Eugene Crowell that any additions to the staff will tip the budget scale, school committee members supported the creation of afterschool instructional tennis.

The hiring of an afterschool instructor/coach will cost about $640. Supt. Crowell said that although he agrees with the objective, and noted that many children will likely participate, it will result in an additional burden on the 1984-1985 budget.

The tennis instruction will be held in the six courts at the high school and behind the football field.

School budget talks

The school committee will be meeting with the advisory committee to discuss the future of a "very tight school budget."

Supt. Eugene Crowell told the committee Monday night that additions of unanticipated athletic coaches, and the unexpected longterm medical absences by some teachers, may cause the expenses to exceed the appropriations. The advisory committee is the first step in requesting any additional appropriations.

The school committee also voted this week to increase the per diem substitute rate from $30 to a minimum of $35. Although the appropriation is equal to or less than the rate paid by surrounding communities, the question remains as to whether the increase is within the budgetary restraints, Supt. Crowell said.

School calendar change

Although it is otherwise indicated in the 1984-1985 school calendar, there will be a full day of classes for all students Sept. 26. It is designated incorrectly as a teacher convention day in the school calendar.

Sept. 21 is slated as a teacher convention date. On that day, there will be no school for all students.

Please mark this change, school administrators warn.

Deer Hill roof

The school committee voted unanimously Monday night to award a contract totaling $128,742 to MacDonald Sprague Co. Inc. of Weymouth for the repair of the Deer Hill School roof.

Supt. Eugene Crowell noted that although there was one lower bid, that company withdrew the offer because of a technical error they made in the bidding process.

The town accountant and town counsel will review the contract awarded to the South Shore company.

Supt. Crowell told the committee that administrators are continuing to seek the fifty percent state reimbursement funds for the $500,000 school roof repairs.

Chapter 515 funds have been funded and the monies will become available. Local and state officials will be meeting Sept. 19 to discuss Cohasset's chances of receiving the state funding.

promise and will be great assets to the team this year.

The members of the team are: Tracy Fitzpatrick, Janet DiGerolamo, Carolyn Lord, Joanie Chisom, Amy Duncombe, Amy Donovan, Tara Stanford, Krissy Pompeo, Sara Seavey, Carla Lucas, Jill Nedrow, Jessica Hamilton, Janet Bagley, Kristin O'Brian, Kerry O'Brian, Caitlin Staunton, Kerri Kirkendall, Karin Anglin, Susan Riley, Lisa Clinton, and Melissa Shea.

The girls open their season Thursday against East Bridgewater at home. Cohasset is very capable of beating them and is looking forward to seeing many fans help cheer them on to victory! Please show your support!

Cross Country

The Cross Country team, coached by Paul Narkiewicz, had their first meet Wednesday, at Norwell. Due to a lack of practice, this will prove to be a tough meet for Cohasset, but the team has a good chance of doing well.

Varsity Field Hockey

The girls' Field Hockey team has been hard at work in preparation for their first game in Middleboro Wednesday at 7:30 p.m. under the lights. This will be a very exciting game and will be quite a challenge for Cohasset.

In a scrimmage against Scituate, Cohasset's offense showed remarkable improvement and dominated almost the entire game. Cohasset has been sparked by the outstanding hustle of Lee Sullivan and Maria Cahill. Veteran, Vicki Spooner has also been playing very well.

The girls are looking forward to a successful season and hope to see many fans rooting them on this fall.

Boys' Varsity Soccer

The boys' varsity soccer team has been looking really good so far and shows tremendous depth which indicates the team will be strong for years to come. Cohasset had five scrimmages all of which they won quite easily.

Seniors Mike DeSantis and David MacDonald, are the team's co-captains this year. The rest of the team consists of: Mason Sandell, Greg Igo, Gary Parziale, Eric Karcher, Chris Kulturides, Peter Cotter, J.P. Diedrich, Bobby Shultz, Kevin Dunn, David Caffrey, Kevin Henry, Mark Crough, Robert Leonard, Chris Kirkendall, Bill McKenna, Kurt Wiesenfluh, Geoff Christensen, Todd Trautwein, Kevin Leary, John Reidy, Justin DeSantis, Doug Dalrymple, Mark Delaney, and Scott Fitzsimmons.

Wednesday, the boys have their first game against Harwich at home.

as Hingham, Hanover or Scituate. Even in the host towns, Leary added, full course credit is not given to those students attending the summer classes.

The proposed policy revision will be posted for one month, during which administrators and guidance counselors will receive comments from the public about the proposed revisions.

Wompatuck Park land meeting

cial meeting on the subject Friday morning (tomorrow) at the Visitors Center at 9:30 a.m.

In the words of Richardson, who has done many such surveys for DEM and is a member of the advisory council, "It would be no less than a sesneless crime at this point in the history of urban development to take publicly owned, unspoiled urban-centered land, as this tract is, with such complex recreational, educational and ecological attributes and blindly negate those outstanding potentials by the sweep of an arbitrary pencil line on a map that is drawn supposdely "in the public-interest" but, in fact, is drawn without a balanced perspective."

treated and disposed of. The Town of Cohasset has appropriated $1,500 to fund the Waste Collection Day. Local businesses and national producers of hazardous wastes sold for household use have also made contributions. The collection day is one day only, Saturday, September 22, starting at 8:30 a.m. and continuing until funds are exhausted. If you will not be in Town, leave hazardous wastes with a neighbor.

If Town residents demonstrate their concerns for the environment by making collection day a success, it may become an annual Cohasset event. PLEASE COME EARLY!

Harvesting Vegetables

Harvest time in the home vegetable garden is here, reports Deborah C. Swanson, 4-H and Home Horticulture Agent of the Plymouth County Extension Service.

Many vegetables are now mature and ready for picking. Many vegetable plants will continue to produce through September.

A free leaflet is available entitled, "Harvesting Vegetables." This leaflet provides harvesting information on over 30 types of vegetables.

To receive a free copy of this leaflet send a postcard to: Harvesting Vegetables, care of Plymouth County Extension Service, P. O. Box 658, High Street, Hanson 02341.

Controlling Fleas and Hornets

Many people have contacted the Plymouth County Extension Service in Hanson recently in regard to flea and hornet control, reports Deborah C. Swanson, 4-H and Home Horticulture Agent.

According to Swanson, the flea problem this year appears to be similar to 1983 in which over 2,000 people requested flea control information.

Another seasonal problem for which information is often requested is that of wasps' and hornets' nets.

Both flea and hornet problems can be solved by the homeowner. For those people who wish to receive a free informational fact sheet on flea or hornet control, please send a postcard with your request to: Plymouth County Extension Service, P. O., Box 658, High Street, Hanson 02341.

Political Advertisement

The experience to do the job. The integrity to do it well.

This election day you'll get to choose a candidate for Congress. The person you choose will be determining our course for the future — keeping the economy sound and growing, maintaining a strong America, and protecting the environment that is so important to those of us who live in the Tenth Congressional District.

One choice on your ballot makes the most sense.
Lew Crampton.

Lew Crampton is running for Congress after having proven that he has the background and the experience to do the job for you in Washington:

— Lew Crampton served as Commissioner of the Massachusetts Department of Community Affairs where he spearheaded the development of thousands of units of needed housing while cutting the agency's operating budget 5%.

— Lew Crampton was Director of the Office of Management and Evaluation of the Environmental Protection Agency where he helped shape the Superfund into an effective program for helping communities troubled by hazardous waste pollution.

— Lew Crampton was the recipient of a special citation from state environmental directors and the National Governor's Association for his work in forging state and federal cooperation in protecting the environment.

In Congress he'll make his experience work for you.

A Good Choice for Congress.

Art center fall schedule

An expanded curriculum in painting and drawing, an all new advertising course, a chance to improve your photographs--all these are on the fall schedule of courses offered by the South Shore Art Center.

A complete class schedule with descriptions of all the courses, workshops and trips is available at the Center, 103 Ripley Road, Cohasset and at area libraries. Advanced registration is required for all Center courses.

New to the curriculum are a Beginning Portrait taught by Katherine Smit; Point of View, taught by Harriet Zabusky-Zand; Figure Drawing by David Tandy; Drawing from Nature, Albert Abany; Portrait Painting for all levels by Judeth Van Hamm Wiers; Oil and Acrylic Painting by Albert Abany; Improve your Photographs, Paul Fortin; Introduction to Advertising by Joe Ciccolo; and a few special one-day workshops.

Information on the fall semester, as well as a demonstration by Wiers, will be at the Center's fall open house, Sunday, Sept. 16 from 4 to 6 p.m. Visitors will have an opportunity to meet instructors, find out class details and register for courses. The fall semester begins Sept. 24.

New York art excursions

Van Gogh in Arles, an exciting exhibit at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, and an opportunity to tour the new wing of the Museum of Modern Art are offered through two special trips to New York City.

The South Shore Art Center, 103 Ripley Road, sponsors two trips to the Big Apple; one a one-day trip Saturday, November 17, to visit van Gogh in Arles, a collection of work on view at the Metropolitan and the other, a two-day art and theater double feature, December 8 and 9. Both trips offer convenient pickups at the Center and other South Shore locations.

Fee for the one-day tour of New York is $49 including a donation to the Center, and for the two-day trip $139 based on double occupancy at the convenient midtown Harley Hotel and also includes a donation to the Center. A triple occupancy is $133 and a single room is $180. Reservations for both trips are being handled through Cerel's Travel in Natick.

The two-day trip offers free time for shopping, gallery-hopping or just enjoying the beauty of New York City at Christmas time. An optional dinner and/or theater is offered for the evening at an additional fee.

For complete information call Cerel's 653-2400 or 237-6190.

Midget hockey tryouts

The Seahawks organization will hold an additional tryout session for boys 15 and 16 years-old who are interested in playing hockey this season.

The Seahawks include Scituate, Cohasset, Hull and Norwell.

This session will be at the Cohasset Winter Gardens Sunday, Sept. 16, from 10:30 to 11:30 a.m.

For further information, call 545-5414 or 545-4949.

Dramatic club tryouts

The Cohasset Dramatic Club will hold tryouts for its forthcoming production of the classic "Cinderella" from 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday, September 23 at the Cohasset Town Hall. Performance dates for the show will be the second and third weekends in December.

Written specially for the Dramatic Club's Town Hall performance by Rushworth Kidder, "Cinderella" will be presented in the form of a traditional English "panto" show. Unlike the American definition of the word "pantomine" which is used to describe a theater performance without words the traditional English "panto" contains words, music and dancing.

"Cinderella's" Director Judy Holmes plans for a cast of at least 25 to thirty players of diverse talents and ages. South Shore area theater enthusiasts are invited to try out for roles in this Cohasset Dramatic Club "Christmas Special". Material for tryout readings will be available at the tryouts. For further information please call 749-0616.

CCC Registration

The Cohasset Community Center is currently taking registration for their Fall Program. All classes are scheduled to start the week of Sept. 23 with most classes running for 12 weeks.

Ruthann Sargent will be instructing Gymnastics for children of all ages, ranging from Toddlers to Teens. Classes include Gym Tot Fitness, Tumble Tots and Beginner Girls and Boys, Intermediate and Advanced. The cost for twelve classes is $36.

Other continuing programs for children are Bowling, Creative Movement, Horseback Riding, Karate, S A.T Preparation, Pinata Workshops, and Puppet Making, along with a new Spanish Class for Children.

A CPR class will be offered Wednesdays, Oct. 10 and 17 from 7 to 11 p.m. as well as a Six Week Quit Smoking Clinic on Monday evenings from 7 to 8 p.m. Fitness classes offered on a continued basis are Joanne Sheppard's Total Fitness Class, Joanne Lehr's Evening Aerobics and Debra Ketchum's Pre-Natal Exercise.

Other new classes being offered this session are Solar Sun Space Design, Tropical Fish as a Hobby, and Bread Making.

For further information or registration stop in or call the Center, Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. (383-0088).

To look at the calendar is to gasp.

On all sides the cry goes out: "Where has the summer gone?" Can it truly be the middle of September? The annual deluge of garden tomatoes is one clue and when your last friend says no to your offer to share your bounty, you're forced into action. It's then that you might want to try making your own ketchup. This is how Liz King does her

HOMEMADE KETCHUP

1/2 peck tomatoes
3 red peppers
2 medium-sized onions, cut fine
2 T salt
1/3 c. sugar
2 c. vinegar
2 tsp. celery salt
2 tsp. ground mustard
1 T each allspice, cloves, cinnamon
1 tsp. paprika

Cook tomatoes, peppers and onions together, without adding water. Press mixture through strainer and measure pulp. To the pulp (4 qts.), add salt, sugar and spices. Cook ingredients together, except vinegar, rapidly for one hour. Add vinegar and cook mixture until thick. Seal in clean, hot jars.

Having one's own little garden gives one a sense of pride and even the scrawniest radish has a special flavor. With convenience foods so popular, it's entirely possible that generations to come may never experience the sight of jellies and pickles standing in neat, shining rows on a special closet shelf. Lucky, indeed, is the family of Susie Hammond, who takes pleasure in "putting things up," such as her

POTTSFIELD PICKLE

3 pts. green tomatoes
3 pts. red tomatoes
3 bunches celery, including leaves
1 qt. onions
1 qt. cabbage
3 hot peppers
4 sweet peppers

Chop all vegetables. Add
1/2 c. salt

Let stand overnight and drain in morning. Add 3 pts. vinegar, 3 pts. sugar, 1/2 T each of clove and cinnamon and 1/2 c. mustard seed. Cook 40 min. and seal while hot.

* * *

As the cucumber vines grow heavy and the slim, green cukes need to be used, you just know something drastic has to be done. That's when Rose Ballentine knows it's time to make

BREAD AND BUTTER PICKLES

2 qts. small cucumbers
1 qt. vinegar
1 T. mustard seed
1/4 tsp. each powdered alum and turmeric
1/2 tsp. pepper
1 c. sugar

Wash and slice cucumbers in quarter-inch slices. Soak overnight in brine made with 1 T salt to each quart of water. In the morning, bring vinegar to a boil and add seasonings. When well mixed, pour over cucumbers which have been drained of brine. Cook until the slices are white. Fill hot, sterilized jars and seal.

Or how about this cuke salad? For this you want two cukes; peel only one. Slice fine. Sprinkle with salt and let stand 3 min. to remove bitter taste of skin. Mince half an onion and add to cukes. Mix and add this dressing:
1/2 c. sour cream
1/2 c. vinegar
1/2 tsp. salt
1/4 tsp. pepper
2 T sugar
1/4 tsp. mustard

Photographer Rose Cundari joins Globe staff

It will be a sorry but proud day for Mariner Newspapers Sept. 26 when photographer Rosemary Cundari signs on as a photographer for the Boston Globe.

Cundari received word late August that she had been chosen as one of this year's "spare" Globe photographers. The Globe screens talented photographers across the state each year, and chooses one to join their staff.

Cundari has moved quickly up the photographers' ladder: she saw her first photo in newsprint in an October, 1982 Hingham Mariner.

She enjoyed photography and decided to rent out darkroom space at the South Shore Art Center, and study with well-known South Shore photographer John Goldie.

By autumn, 1983, Cundari was the Mariner's chief photographer.

The step to the Globe is an exciting one for Cundari, and although she acknowledges she's only guaranteed one year's employment, she looks forward to the learning experience.

Cundari, a 22-year old lifetime Hingham resident, will still be covering for the Mariner from time to time.

In the meantime, look for her byline in the Globe, along with former Mariner photographer Greg Derr's, who left for the Globe just one year ago.

All in a lather over peace

PATCHES

By Lois Martin

This is war.

I am the Marines, the Air Force, the French Underground and the guerilla forces.

And Lilly considers herself the Normandy Beach of this declaration. She's the victim, the battlefield.

Because I shall know no rest until I have ousted every flea on her golden retriever body.

She must wish I wouldn't, that I'd give up my crusade, leaving her to handle the itches one by one. I'm certain now that she favors passive resistance to my aggressive onslaught on the mites that crawl on her.

For a while, too much while in retrospect, that's what happened. I saw her scratching. Well, heck, I could scratch, too, and that wouldn't have meant I had fleas. I figured she'd take care of it, one or two minor nuisances. She's a big dog. Fleas are little.

The vet said those white collars aren't worth diddly-squat. Use the spray. I did, now and then when I passed by the bottle.

Within the last couple of weeks, however, the truth became apparent. Lill doesn't have a couple of fleas. She has an army of them. They gallop up her belly, frolic in her tail, set up housekeeping to multiply on her back.

I discovered this during a spray session.

And since then when she scratches, I itch. I'll have no more of it. Those little buggers are dead. The time has come. I'll see to it.

In Maine I thought I was watching a mass drowning when Lilly swam the bay unendingly. She paddled toward the island, switched courses, came back, turned upstream again for another Esther Williams stint toward Castine. All the while I sat watching, an evil satisfied smirk on my face. I was not watching a dog swim, I was watching thousands of fleas drown.

Not so. Simply not so. Tell my why. Do they hold their breath? Do they have underwater gear that constitutes fins in wet elements? How in heaven's name did they survive?

A moot point. My need for understanding of their survival was displaced by my need for their demise.

Terry bought the most serious flea soap in town. The pet store person said it was. Clothed in my bathing suit, I called Lilly to join me in the outside shower. She seemed to sigh, recognizing my sugar-coated tones, the D-Day plans for her fleas.

But she surrendered. I lathered. In that outing I personally witnessed and accomplished the slaughter of hundreds of fleas. I met them in the soapsuds. I sought them in the paws. The ones that didn't choke to death on the soap, strangled in my visored index/thumb grip. I tossed their bodies on the grass and saw them wash away toward the marsh where they couldn't make anyone itch anymore.

That afternoon I gazed victoriously on a dog who knew peace. She sat drying in the sun, lolling in the calm of a body uncrawled upon by fat fleas who'd found a good home.

With a sense of someone who's been sitting on the back of an open convertible and waving to crowds through the ticker tape parade in her honor, I claimed my victory.

Too soon.

Last night during the news, I heard a familiar sound, the jangling of a dog's tags on her collar . . . because she was scratching.

Investigation confirmed my fears. There on Lill's belly were the smug survivors of my allout annihilation. Fleas romped near where her navel would be while I, as discouraged as Custer must have been, considered my options.

My duty is clear.

I shall bomb the house. I have in my possession what constitutes a cyanide for the little incisors. I'll take the dog, bomb my property, leave it be the annointed amount of time. Return to shower and scour the dog once more.

And then we shall be free.

The world will little note nor long remember what I have done for Lill's liberty.

But she will. When she looks at me now, as I pick up my weapons, her brown eyes start to water. I know what's upsetting her. She overheard someone tell me that a good frost kills fleas. She knows we have a freezer.

Sea Cadet Program invites area youth to join

Calling all young people between 11 and 18 years old.

If you are interested in becoming part of a group which travels; explores sea traditions; learns navigation; Natural History and seamanship; a chance to go to sea for training on a Coast Guard or Navy Ship; and eventually become a leader try the United States Sea Cadet Corp.

The United States Naval Sea Cadet Corp, Scituate Division, has been meeting weekly for over a year and has had many sea worthy experiences, as well as providing community service in many different capacities.

Friday, Sept. 14 from 7:30 to 8:30 p.m., anyone interested in learning more about Sea Cadets or wishing to join is cordially invited to a meeting at the G.A.R. Hall on Country Way in Scituate (near Ronnie's Shone's Store).

Lt. Robert Feijoo, Commanding Officer of the Sea Cadets, will present an overview of the program and each cadet division will have a display showing an aspect of the program.

The Scituate Division is led by Commanding Officer, Lt. Robert Feijoo, Executive Officer, Lt. Lee Hawver; Adminstrative Officer, Lt. J.G. Lillian Rousseau, and Fiscal Officer, Lt. J.G. Jeffrey Ludlow.

These leaders have worked together to plan a program which stresses teamwork and team spirit.

The Sea Cadet Program is strongly supported by Chief Rowland, Commanding Officer, of the Scituate Coast Guard Station; himself a former Sea Cadet.

The Scituate Division will be making their new home at the Scituate Coast Guard Station in November, when Coast Guard renovations are completed.

Thus will enable the cadets to enjoy "hands' on" experience with Coast Guard equipment and vessels.

Youths 11 through 13 years 9 months are eligible for the League Cadet Program and those people from 13 years 9 months to 18 years are considered Sea Cadets.

Lt. Feijoo says the Sea Cadet Program is not your typical youth program.

"We have the ability to introduce people to activities that might not be available to them otherwise."

Executive Officer, Lt. Hawver, (a retired Naval Officer) further added: "Parents are important to this program; but not in the capacity of leaders. Parents are asked to be part of the units active support group called 'Friends of the Scituate Division.'

'The Friends' are asked to help arrange transportation, assist with communications and to help fund raising efforts."

U.S. Naval Sea Cadets (Scituate Division) who participated in a training program in Davisville, Rhode Island this summer included Veronica Flynn, Edward Sweedock, Patricia Anderson and Caitlin Perry.

Those young people who join the USNSCC this fall will qualify for participation in the very prestigious commissioning of the Sciutate Division in November.

Further information is available by calling Lt. Rousseau at 545-1120 or Mrs. Robert LaVoie 545-0145.

Once upon a time, not so far away,
a brave Copper King built an enchanted kingdom in a land by the sea.
There in Scituate, he surrounded his mansion with idyllic pastures and formal gardens. Then built a fairy tale tower to watch over his dream.
Some said he was eccentric. Others said he was vain. But in truth, the legendary millionaire, Thomas Lawson, was building a beautiful haven as a gift for his beloved family. And in 1903, Dreamwold came true.

Now it's coming true again.
All the majesty, privacy and splendor that was Dreamwold. In twenty-six unique Victorian condominium residences encircling a spectacular rose garden and beautiful swimming pool.
Dreamwold. A magnificent blend of historic restoration and new construction as only Boston's premier developer, Parencorp, could do.
This summer, Dreamwold is available at pre-marketing prices, starting in the mid-100's. Visit Dreamwold between 11:00 AM and 6:00 PM daily for a personal presentation. Or call 545-0222 or 731-5570 for more information.
It's coming true again. The new Dreamwold. Soon to be a legend of its own.

Officials review housing plans

If all plans are approved, there will be an Intermediate Care Facility for eight mentally retarded adults (ICF-MR) ready for occupancy by the end of next summer.

Acccording to Ted Lang, acting area director of the Coastal Area Office of the Department of Mental Health, if all necessary permits are received, construction of the ICFMR will begin in January. The facility will be located on a parcel of land formerly owned by the state Department of Public Works, adjacent to the former Nike site on Crocker Lane. The access road to the property can be seen from Route 3A.

The proposed facility will be home for eight mentally retarded men and women, aged 25 to 40, who have been selected by the DMH as the best candidates for this type of program. Four staff members will be at the site to assist the residents.

The purpose of this facility, one of 53 proposed by DMH for development across the state within the next two years, is to give moderately-retarded adults an opportunity to learn and live in a semi-independent environment. The hope is that one day these individuals will become increasingly independent, able to live within a community, outside an institutional surrounding.

Thirty persons attended a public hearing Tuesday night at which DMH officials answered questions about the proposed site.

Everyone in attendance seemed to favor the proposal, although many had several questions about the specifics of the property, and the services intended for the individuals within the home.

Selectmen Rocco Laugelle and Frank England, who attended the hearing, said that after specific engineering and architectural housing plans are developed, the board will hold another hearing for public input.

The first of many municipal reviews begins Sept. 24 when the Board of Health inspects the proposed septic system plans.

Plans for the ICFMR began about nine months ago when DMH located the state-owned land on Crocker Lane and determined it was the best spot for such a facility. As Maria Plante noted at this week's meeting,

He's known as 'The' Building Inspector

By Jane Lane

"Everytime I hear a hammer pounding in this town, I'll be there."

That's not a warning, just a statement of fact from Cohasset's Building Inspector Edward Poskus.

Whether it be a new roof, an addition or construction of a new home, Poskus will be there, sooner or later, to inspect the work. Not soley to be a thorn in the side of contractors and carpenters.

"I really don't want to be known as a 'strict' building inspector, just 'the' building inspector," he explains. "I am simply enforcing the state building codes. I call my observations straight and then I don't have to worry. Everyone knows where I stand."

Poskus came to Cohasset four months ago, and already he is a veritable fixture in this town. He seems to be everywhere all the time. An impossiblity, he notes, but a goal for which he is constantly striving.

He says there are days when he is walking about town and hears the pound of some very busy hammers. He strolls over to the carpenters bent in hard labor, and inquires, "what's up?" They respond and then the unanticipated line follows, "Well, let me introduce myself. I'm the town's building inspector. Do you have a permit for this job?"

As Poskus says, "they usually look at each other and stumble about, saying, 'I think the owner has one, I'm not sure.' And then I say get over to Town Hall and get yourself a permit."

That permit, by the way, is now doubled because of the owner's failure to obtain the necessary license prior to the construction start. It's what's known in the Building Code business as a "gotcha."

Cohasset's new building inspector is a former partner in a Brockton architectural firm. In fact, his late partner, Horatio W. Beal of Cohasset, designed the Deer Hill School. Poskus worked on the addition to the building. A resident of Brockton, Poskus was active in that city's planning for many years. He was a member of the planning board for nine years and a zoning board of appeals member for eight years. He was a former chairman of each group.

He studied at various institutes, including Wentworth, M.I.T., and the Graduate School of Design at Harvard.

Golden grabs highest vote total

The war cry in Cohasset is "On to November," as this politically-intense town readies itself for the national election.

About 45 percent of Cohasset's registered voters took the time to cast a ballot in Tuesday's primary. That's a fairly good average for a primary, Town Clerk Frances Marks assessed, but it was a hotly-contested election with many varied choices among the candidates.

The flow of voters was steady throughout the day, she said, with the greatest number entering the polls during the afterwork hours. The only bit of excitement to pass through the Town Hall doors came just before closing.

As incumbent Congressman Gerry Studds approached the steps to the auditorium with his mother, Beatrice, a flood of cameras waited in anticipation. It has been an election day tradition for the Cohasset native to escort his mother to the polls, but this year has been different. The national and local attention focused upon the Congressman during this campaign eliminated any possibility of privacy while he and his mother cast their votes.

In his race, Studds managed to continue tradition by easily defeating his opponents in his hometown. The incumbent crushed Plymouth Democrat Peter Flynn by almost 300 votes here, with newcomer Christopher Trundy managing a meager 19 votes.

Studds will meet Republican Lewis Crampton in the November election, which many observe to be the race

Emergency medical services week

This year, Massachusetts EMS Week will be celebrated during the week of September 16 - 22.

The Fire Department provides the ambulance service to the residents of Cohasset and the public is invited to visit fire headquarters and inspect their ambulance and have a free blood pressure reading taken if desired.

Emergency telephone numbers are listed as follows: Fire/Ambulance 383-0260; Poison Control Center 232-2120; Police Dept. 383-1212; and Local Poison Information Center 232-2120.

New fire exam

There will be a Civil Service Captain's examination for the Fire Department November 17. Although selectmen had voted to open the exam to the public, this test had been scheduled prior to the decision and will therefore be available to Cohasset residents only.

In the meantime, selectmen will decide whether to remove Acting Capt. Richard Conley from that rank. He was among four other Cohasset firefighters who participated in a Civil Service exam for the Captain's position, and failed. He has been acting captain for almost two years.

Selectmen chairman Cliff Mitman said board members, who have discussed this issue for several weeks in anticipation of the November test, are aware that someone may pass this exam and be appointed to the permanent position.

He said the removal of Acting Capt. Conley from the rank may be discussed at next week's meeting. He added the postponement of any decision also hinged on Chief Martin Dooley's plan to provide a Captain within the department if Conley is removed from the position.

If no one in Cohasset passes the November exam, there is another Civil Service test scheduled for the spring. That exam will be open to the public, with appointment preference to Cohasset residents.

Thanks to town workers

The Mazza family of Rustic Drive has nothing but praise for the help provided them this weekend by the Cohasset Fire Department and Wiring Inspector.

There was a power surge in the Mazza home about 4 a.m. Saturday. When the fire department arrived at that time, firefighters discovered a blaze in the burner located in the basement.

"Just to make us feel safe, Capt. Mark Trask and Firefighter Tom Finnigan stayed with us until 8 a.m. when the Eastern Edison Co. arrived. Luckily there were no other emergencies, so they could stay with us," Elizabeth Mazza explained. "It made all of us, my husband Joe and son Joey, feel special, that they really cared about us."

Cohasset's Wiring Inspector, Steve Wigmore, heard about the electrical problem on his home scanner and went to the Mazza home early that morning. He checked the wiring throughout the house and stayed until the electric company arrived.

"We are so lucky to have people like these men who care so much about one family. We want to thank them for everything they did that morning," Elizabeth continued. The home is back to normal now, she added, after Saturday morning's scare.

School date change

The school calendar shows the P.C.E.A. conference for Wednesday, Sept. 26. The conference has been changed to Friday, Sept. 21. This is to notify all parents that schools will be closed for student and teachers on this day.

Special Town Meeting

A special Town Meeting will be held Monday, Nov. 19 at 7:30 p.m. at town hall.

Winter parking changes?

Selectman Rocco Laugelle said last week that "the time has come that we should make some changes" regarding winter parking.

Laugelle told his fellow board members that he knows of no other town where residents are allowed to park on the street overnight, every night during the winter months.

He said highway superintendent Harold Litchfield has spoken with him about establishing restrictions, but said Litchfield has no suggestions at this time and he would like to meet with the board.

Selectmen agreed to the meeting, but set no date.

Emergency Medical Services Advisory Comm to meet

The emergency medical services advisory committee, formed to pick up where last year's ambulance study committee left off, will meet for the first time as a group on Sept. 25 at 7:30 at Town Hall.

In a meeting with selectmen last Wednesday, four of the committee's members were told just what selectmen are looking to them for.

Their first task will be to study bids and specifications for a new town ambulance. With that accomplished the committee will turn its attention to the possibilities of outfitting the ambulance with medical equipment and will look at the need for further training of the EMT force.

Selectman John DeBassio noted it is a 15 to 20 minute drive to South Shore Hospital, and perhaps the EMT's could benefit from additional training, such as cardiac care training.

If the committee did decide further EMT training would be of benefit to the town, selectmen said they could them investigate the cost and time it would take to train the force.

But before they begin anything, the committee will sit down and read the ambulance study committee's report--as of last Wednesday, committee members hadn't received copies of the document

Hazardous Waste Collection

This Saturday, September 22, S.C.A. Chemical Services will be at Cohasset Town Hall to collect household hazardous materials. S.C.A. Chemical is licensed by the E.P.A. and the Commonwealth of Massachusetts to collect, transport and dispose of hazardous waste.

The collection day will give Cohasset residents access to safe treatment and disposal of household toxic wastes. Improper disposal of these chemicals can cause seepage into ground water and contaminate our town's water supply.

Common household hazardous wastes include:

drain cleaners	paints (oil base)
oven cleaners	paint thinner
toilet bowl cleaners	lighter fluid
polishes and waxes	weed killers
solvents & thinners	pesticide (insect or rodent killer)
woodstain & preservatives	old medicine
pool chemicals	used motor oil
photographic chemicals	antifreeze
battery acid

Basically, anything labelled "Caution". "Flammable", "Combustible" "Harmful", or "Poison" is toxic and should be brought in.

The Hazardous Waste Collection day is funded by the Town of Cohasset, donations from local businesses and national producers of hazardous materials sold for household use.

Show your concern for a healthy environment and participate in our effort to keep Cohasset clean. Collection will begin at 8:30 a.m. this Saturday morning at Town Hall parking lot and will continue until funds are exhausted.

If you have any questions or are interested in helping, please contact the Hazardous Materials Advisory Committee through the Board of Health.

Politicians unite against Feds

By Judy Gilman

An impressive array of state and local officials from both ends of the political spectrum gathered at Wompatuck State Park Friday morning to declare themselves a united front in the fight to add 767 acres of the so-called Cohasset Annex to the park.

"I can't believe I'm agreeing with Gerry Studds," said State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray (R-Cohasset), referring to her liberal Democratic Congressional counterpart, in voicing her support to get the entire acreage added to the park, "the way I like it—for nothing."

"I'm going to be right with you on this one," Studds said, in taking time out from a hectic primary campaign schedule. "It was a shame what happened on Nantucket and we're not going to let it happen again." He was referring to a similar offer the General Services Administration (GSA) made with the residents of Nantucket in asking them to buy back a piece of property that had, at one time, been taken by the government by eminent domain. The islanders are in the process of raising the money.

"There is no reason why public funds should be used to purchase public land," Studds added.

The bruhaha that brought Studds and Murray to Wompatuck, together with Environmental Affairs Secretary James Hoit and Department of Environmental Management Commissioner James Gutensohn was a recent offer by GSA to give some 650 acres of the former Cohasset Annex to the state to add to Wompatuck. That would be free, GSA said. But the prime piece of the property, 135 acres of upland, had a price tag of $1.5 million. The state could pay that price, or the land could go on the open market, to be developed.

The Cohasset Annex, off the end of the Leavitt Street in Hingham on the Hingham-Cohasset border, had been used for a number of years by the U.S. Army Reserve. Earlier this year the GSA declared the property surplus, and the state applied for it.

Hingham officials have also been concerned about the land's unsettled status, since a Weymouth teenager fell off an unused railroad trestle last winter when it collapsed, falling nearly 40 feet. There has been no clear-cut policy over who has first-responder responsibility for the property, which is under the nominal authority of the Department of Defense.

And officials Friday said GSA jumped the gun in offering the state only a part of the land and placing a price tag on the rest. Normally, the Secretary of the Interior, William Clark, would make a recommendation on disposal of the land to the GSA, who would then act on it. The northeast Interior office, in Philadelphia, has already recommended that the entire tract, which includes a large variety of trees, flowers, and mammals, as well as several historic mill sites, be given to the state in its entirety.

Gutensohn noted that Massachusetts, the sixth smallest state in the country, has the sixth largest state park system nationwide. "Here in Massachusetts we take our resources seriously," he said. "And if we all work together, we will prevail."

"We stand united," said Hoit. "This is just an outrageous suggestion to make. It departs from the government's clear policy, and the land deserves the 100 percent discount (the so-called federal policy when the federal government gives land to a state)."

Hingham selectmen chairman Kate Mahony noted the zoning for the area, open and recreational space, does not permit any sort of development of the type GSA was suggesting. And Lot Bates, Cohasset water commissioner, and John DeBassio, Cohasset selectman, noted they are working to keep the Cohasset watershed area, part of which is in this disputed property, pure and unspoiled.

Gilbert Bliss, director of the state's Division of Forests and Parks, said, "We've looked forward to getting the Cohasset Annex since 1966 (when the state took over Wompatuck). It will round out the property here. The Commonwealth has made that commitment." He added that once the property is obtained, the state will have to do some work on it, including developing 7.5 miles of trails and some communal campsites, before it can be used. But the additional propety, he said, will expand the variety of hiking and camping experiences available in Wompatuck.

The officials said GSA has the final say on the disposal of the property, but that a recommendation for a total transfer from Interior would be hard to ignore. Those concerned with the future of the Cohasset Annex are urged to write to the Interior Secretary and express their opinions. Letters should be addressed to:

The Honorable William P. Clark, Secretary
Department of the Interior
18th and CSt., N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20405.

There is no present timetable set for the final disposal of the land, but interested parties were urged to get their letters in as soon as possible.

In Cohasset, Poskus is 'The' inspector

But despite his love for architecture, Poskus felt last year it was time to wind down the business. At just that time, he saw the Cohasset job advertised and he applied. When he was appointed, selectmen noted his qualifications were far and above any other applicants'.

As he so eloquently explains, the architectural business encompasses many features of his current position.

"Twenty percent of my work as an architect was acting as a contract administrator for my client," he says. "I would observe the work going on in construction and check to make sure everything was going according to my plans, and the building codes. These are very similar jobs.

"In essence, I was a building inspector along with being an architect. The glamour part of the job was designing something on paper for a client. Seeing the product take form from that blank sheet of paper to mortar and concrete is greatly satisfying. But between the paper and the mortar I was always a building inspector."

It is evident Poskus has enjoyed his four months in Cohasset. As he sits back in his office chair, he smiles broadly and frequently, and says he is contemplating a move to this town.

And if town officials or local builders are worried about seeking his replacement (something that has become a tradition in past years), that is a needless concern. Poskus quickly assures all that he will remain in Cohasset "for a long time. I really enjoy it here. I have no intention of leaving."

The people, he adds, have been cordial to him. And his fellow workers within Town Hall have been "superb."

He possesses only praise for the people who have come to his assistance in the past months, including Plumbing Inspector and "Town Historian" Bob Leonard, and his secretary Sandy Murray.

"She's my right and my left arm," he states, confirming Sandy's opinion that they make "a great team for the town of Cohasset."

Although the small square office on the second floor of Town Hall can become quite crowded with people and maps, Poskus spends much of his workday in the field. He schedules time for office conferences, letter writing and telephone calls between 8:30 and 9:30 each morning, and from noon to 1 p.m. The remainder of the day is occupied with inspections and observations of construction throughout the town.

Edward Poskus

"There's very little I don't see in this town," he says, laughing.

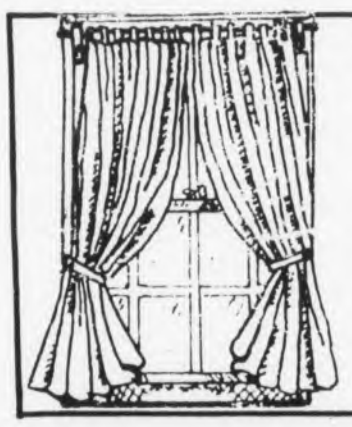
The majority of builders in Cohasset, Poskus says, are honest, hard-working contractors who abide by the town's zoning codes. But for the minority who think they can evade the wrath of the building inspector, Poskus usually proves them wrong.

Since he began, he has instituted a Stop Work violation notice. In bright letters of red, this sign must be hung in shame on any building where work has been completed in violation of zoning bylaws. Just recently he inspected some construction and found the foundation inadequate. The hapless contractor was slapped with a violation and told to correct the problem until further work was authorized to begin. A fine of at least $50 is levied on anyone beginning work without approval of the building inspector.

"These contractors are not fooling anyone. They have to complete their work according to code and if they don't and are caught, it just means more labor costs, and time lost on the project. It's just going to cost them more money."

Poskus also feels strongly that the future owner of any property deserves the best from the contractor and the town. If he witnesses a building violation, he feels it his legal and moral obligation to halt further work until it is corrected.

As a word of caution to all future home repairers and builders, the permit fee will be doubled if work is started without the town-issued license. As Poskus notes, "I don't feel sorry for anyone who begins work without the permit and tells me they didn't know they had to have one. All they have to do is call. Plenty of people call me here and ask."



A residential permit fee costs $10 for the first $1000 valuation; $3 for each additional $1000; $10 for the first $1000 for commercial property, and $5 for each $1000.

Currently there is much residential construction in Cohasset, he says. And the commercial future of Cohasset looks extremely busy as more designs are before planning and zoning boards for approval.

And according to Poskus, he'll be around to make weekly inspections of all these proposed developments.

Whether it's helping the school department review architectural plans for the roof project, or designing plans to renovate the Bates Building, Poskus is willing to lend an experienced hand to everyone. It's not gratitude he seeks in return for his assistance.

"This is a very cooperative business," he easily explains, not wanting to elaborate on anything but the positive aspects of his professional position. "And I am working for some super people."

Rockland Trust explains guilty plea

By Dave Warren

The Rockland Trust Company's failure to file reports on large cash transactions was not a "willful" act, its chairman insists, but the bank chose to plead guilty to federal charges instead of fighting the U.S. Justice Dept. in court.

Bank chairman John F. Spence says there were three reasons behind the decision not to fight: bank officials admit they were "technically wrong" in not reporting the transactions; they wanted to bring to a quick end the daily front page coverage of the case; and it probably would have cost the bank more to fight the charges than the $50,000 fine imposed by the court.

"All lawyers get paid," Spence said in an interview Monday at the bank's main branch in Rockland Center. "And mostly they get paid a lot. Anything we would have saved on the fine (if we won) clearly would have gone to lawyers."

Form 4789 Currency Transaction Report

File a separate report for each transaction

Complete all applicable parts—see instructions)

Part I Identity of individual who conducted this transaction with the financial institution

Part II Individual or organization for whom this transaction was completed. (Complete only if different from Part I)

Part III Customer's account number.

Part IV Description of transaction. If more space is needed, attach a separate schedule and check this box

Part V Financial institution reporting the financial transaction.

The guilty plea came last Thursday in U.S. District Court in Boston, where the bank was cited with not reporting 19 transactions totalling $1 million in 1981 to the Internal Revenue Service.

The IRS investigation of Rockland Trust turned up 281 unreported transactions totalling $11 million between 1980 and 1982. Federal charges involved just 19 of those transactions. Rockland Trust was fined $50,000 after pleading guilty to the charges. Charges may be brought on the remaining 262 transactions in the future.

The Bank Secrecy Act of 1970 requires banks to file reports on all transactions of more than $10,000 to the IRS. Changes instituted in July of 1980 permitted exemptions for certain types of customers (supermarkets and retail stores) who customarily used cash in their regular bank transactions.

The act was created in part to eliminate the "laundering" of money from illegal acts--such as prostitution, gambling, and drug dealings--through the banks.

Spence insists that every one of the 281 transactions involved was "a legitimate bank transaction with a customer we knew." The bank is guilty, he said, of not maintaining an authorized list of customers whose transactions had to be reported to the IRS, and of not seeing that branches of the bank were adhering to changes in the reporting laws.

Spence said memos were drawn up and sent to all branch presidents outlining the 1980 changes in the reporting law. Bank officials never followed through on implementation of the changes, however, and very few transactions were reported.

"It was not enough just to send (the memos) out," Spence said. "It was our job to make sure everyone understood the change, implemented the change, and knew the law."

Of the $11 million of alleged reporting violation, federal investigators said $8.1 of the transactions involved the Bay State Gold and Silver Exchange of Plymouth, which was closed by owner Richard Binder in 1981.

Spence said the bank made the mistake of treating Binder's business as a retail business. "It was an error of interpretation. (Bay State Gold and Silver) should have been removed from the exempt list--it was not a retail business," he admitted.

Changes

IRS investigators first began looking at Rockland Trust's dealings in May of 1983, when discrepancies were noted between the banks deposits with the Federal Reserve in Boston and computer records of large transactions stored in Utah.

When the IRS investigation began, bank officials took a hard look at the transaction recording process, saw what they had done wrong, and made changes in July to eliminate the possibility of oversight.

"We now have a wonderful 30-page manual (outlining reporting procedures," Spence said. "And when auditors go to our branches, the first thing they check are the currency books."

The bank now also has cash logs to record all

Detailed plans needed for car dealer

By Lisa Messersmith

A preliminary site plan for the Autohaus foreign car dealership was presented to the Planning Board Wednesday, September 12, by owner Robert Guarino and architect Kevin Schopfer.

This plan differed from the one presented to the Zoning Board of Appeals the previous week. The new plan provides the 116 parking spaces required by the zoning by-laws. Guarino decided to alter his original plan by extending the rear parking lot forty feet. No change was made in any other area of the property including the building itself which will remain at 12,250 square feet.

Merle Brown of the Conservation Commission expressed his concern that the new parking might extend into the flood plain. Engineers from Loring Jacobs Co., the firm which represents Autohaus, assured Brown that the parking area will remain on the ledge, and not extend into the flood plain .

Members of the Design and Review Board also attended the meeting to request a clear and revised plan for landscaping, which was not included in Guarino's presentation.

Planning board member Robert Sturdy suggested that the landscaping completed at Autohaus be "in harmony" with the landscaping at the new Bergson's Restaurant. The two businesses will be built adjacent to one another and will share a common driveway.

While Sturdy desired a polished landscaping plan, board members Chris Bassett and Daniel Cotton preferred the natural landscaping of the existing trees and shrubs.

Schopfer's general plans for the building and landscaping emphasize the naturalness of the site. The rear of the building will be set into the surrounding trees. The seven-car showroom will be the focal point, while the entire building is designed to be "efficient and aerodynamic."

As in previous meetings, planning board members want to ensure that any new construction on Route 3A improve the quality of that section of town. Sturdy described the "seedy looking business area that is showing signs of decay" as the basis of his argument to see a finalized plan for Autohaus.

Other concerns arose within the site plan itself. The plan failed to show complete landscaping, security, lighting, storage, drainage, and elevation plans. Chairman Chris Bassett said she wished to see a definitive site plan, "rather than helping you design your building, your site." "Fifty percent of the information we need is not here," Bassett added.

Members decided that they must see a finalized site plan, and agreed to extend the hearing until September 19. At the next meeting Guarino must provide definitive plans for elevation, landscaping, lighting, security, building materials, and drainage calculations to include the extended parking area.

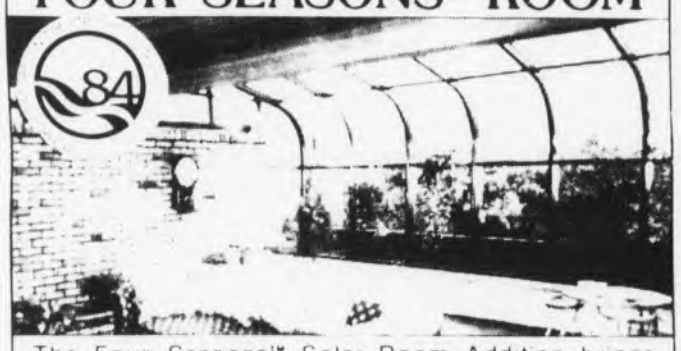
Board requests revised plans

William Last came before the Planning Board again Wednesday September 12 to ask permission to build on Lot Nine of the Bates Lane development, a lot which, he stated, is not directly involved with the drainage problem discussed at the Sept. 5 meeting.

Last wants to continue building on Lot Nine with the stipulation that he will halt construction if, within two weeks, he does not present to the planning board a drainage solution for the other lots.

To supplement his argument, Last stated the owners of Lot Nine are in a financial situation which requires that construction continue immediately.

Members of the Drainage Committee expressed their concerns for the abutting lots. Member Tom Cook wanted to know how Last could grade the land on Lot Nine without increasing the water levels on the adjoining lots. "You're going to have a swimming pool there," stated Cook.



Another concern, expressed by planning board member Daniel Cotton, was the inevitable effect of heavy rainfall and melting snow and ice on the properties. He fears that the neighbors "could suffer again."

Chairman Chris Bassett concluded that Last was not prepared with a solution to the drainage problem. She stated, "we're going about this the wrong way." Bassett explained that the real issue was not the financial situation of owners of Lot Nine, but the drainage problem of the area at Bates Lane.

The planning board reiterated its request of the previous week for a solution to the drainage issue. Within the new plan Last must include the original water levels and flow before construction and explain the levels and flow since construction began.

Last will consult with Neil Murphy, the engineer for the Bates Lane development, who will provide a set of plans and water calculations for John Modzelewski, the town engineer. The planning board also expects a set of plans from Last at the next meeting September 19.

A TRAVEL AGENT'S WORK

A travel agent's first question should be, "what are you interested in doing?" Housing planned for retarded

Cohasset is currently the only town in the surrounding South Shore area without any program for the mentally retarded.

Lang also explained that construction of a facility for the mentally retarded will help to fulfill the town's obligation to construct housing for the handicapped.

The eight ICFMR residents will be chosen from other state-operated facilities for the mentally retarded, larger institutions such as the Walter Fernald School and the Paul Dever School. Although Cohasset residents will have no preference, all the individuals are South Shore residents, and at least one will be from Cohasset, Lang said.

In slides presented to the audience, Lang showed how the building will look upon completion. Designed by architect John Sharrod, the exterior of the one-floor building will be grey cedar shingles. Large windows illuminate the house from all sides.

Inside, there will be a cathedral-ceiling recreation-livingroom, four bedrooms and a kitchen. All construction will meet strict federal regulations, Lang said, and there will be smoke and fire detectors, doors which automatically close after a person leaves the area, and all alarms will be connected to the Cohasset Fire Department.

Daily chores will be divided among the residents, who are supervised within the home by a minimum of three professional staff persons. Described as "low functioning, severely retarded " individuals, the residents proposed for this facility need assistance with washing, cleaning, cooking and dressing.

During the day, they will be transported to educational or vocational sheltered facilities. All the proposed residents are non verbal and well behaved. They have been pre-selected as individuals who will best respond to this type of semi-outside environment, Lang explained.

Although proposed by the DMH, a bidding process to watch. Crampton is no stranger to Cohasset and feels that if he can sway the Flynn delegates to his side, a Republican upset may result.

Crampton was an easy victor Tuesday with a total vote tally of 563, a wide margin over his nearest opponent, George Donovan of Hull with a total of 178.

In the U.S. Senate race, Cohasset Democrats sided with victor John Kerry. He squeaked out a win by 10 votes over opponent James Shannon. The other two opponents trailed far behind the two leaders.

Cohasset favored winner Raymond Shamie over Elliot Richardson by a 76-vote spread. Shamie gathered a total of 519 votes here.

In the state Senate race, Cohasset went all out for former resident William Golden. As in Hingham, Golden topped all candidates with a total of 796 votes, compared to 221 for his opponent Richard Walsh.

And Cohasset native Mary Jeanette Murray, unopposed in her campaign for a fifth term as State Representative, received 811 votes.

around town

☐ There was a "big bash" held last weekend at the American Legion. It was all of the retired firemen getting together for the first annual party, hopefully with many more to come! The attendance was almost 100%, with Jack Thompson the only one unable to make it (he is in Florida). Those present were: retired chief Charlie Pipenbrink, ret. deputy chief Tom Hernan, and retired deputy chief George Casey; also, David Marks, Ralph Perroncello, "Hot!" Sullivan Bill Nickerson, Frank Wheelwright and Walter Wheelwright, Noel Edwards, Austin Studley, Bob Henn and retired deputy Neil O'Brien. Thirteen couples attended and a super time was had! Noel Edwards received an honor as the oldest member of the group and Charlie Pipenbrink made his announcement that as of January first, he will be a resident of Florida.

☐ Libby Pompeo has a birthday that will be celebrated worldwide from this year on . . . Lady Di had her second baby son on Libby's birthday!

☐ Great attendance at the various sporting events held last week and the various teams are hoping for a better one this week! It means an awful lot to the teams that have been trying so hard all week to have support at the game, so do it! Be sure to check out the soccer team in their new sweats, provided by the soccer boosters, they look so sharp! And, the football team had new blue pants, to make a whole new "blue and white skipper" look . . . all a true credit to the town and groups that made them possible.

☐ While on the subject of boosters, the Gridiron is doing something different this weekend that should be of interest to all grades, 5-12. This Saturday is an open date on the schedule, so the Football team is going to hold a clinic at the football field from 9 a.m. until 12:00 noon. After the clinic, the Gridiron (under the careful guidance of Peter O'Loughlin, head chef) will hold a cookout for all participants. Set aside Sept. 22 and be sure that your player attends . . . sounds like something for everyone!

☐ The AFS is soon to begin selecting a high school student for its American Abroad program . . . call Eileen Corbett at 383-6467 for more information (she can give you first-hand news as her daughter, Kathy, participated in the program).

☐ As if the kids would let you forget, I'm asked to remind you that this Friday is no school day, not Sept. 21 as listed on the school calendar.

☐ Kevin Soule is celebrating . . . last week he had his "Jack Benny" birthday, the last one that he will admit to. So, next year on Sept. 15 don't even mention that you know Kevin will be forty.

☐ William T. Replogle, formerly of Cohasset, has been appointed as copywriter at Arnold & Company Inc, a Boston-based advertising, marketing and public relations agency.

Replogle's responsibilities will include Nabisco Confections and the Hampshire House Restaurant. He will also be involved with new business presentations. Previously a partner at Bill & Tom Advertise, Boston, he has also held the position of copy director at the Drumbeater Corp., Lynnfield, Mass. and copywriter at Addison Wesley Publishing Company, Reading, Mass.

☐ Susie and Tom Reardon are back from a recent trip to Europe, and had a marvelous time . . .

☐ There are a few openings left for the Jimmy Fund Tournament, to be held on Monday, Sept. 24, so get in touch with Bob Magner or Clark Chatterton if you are interested. If you are unable to play but would like to do your part for the Jimmy Fund, donate a prize to the raffle that will be held after the dinner. Certainly a worthy event.

☐ It is Girl Scout time again . . . Monday, Sept. 24 at 6 p.m. at the Second Congregational Church is the first meeting of the year. The Girl Scouts are made up of fourth, fifth and sixth grade girls. If you want more information, please contact Louise Smullen or Eleanor Watson.

☐ That's all the news that was given to me this week . . . why not call with your news, everyone is certainly interested in it! And, it is what makes this "Around Town."

Local Primary Day election results wrapup

Tuesday night was a night to remember for anyone interested in state and national politics.

Nationally, readers opened their morning newspapers and turned on their televisions and radios to hear what happened with Congressman Gerry Studd's bid to regain his seat.

Anyone interested in learning about the Democratic race for U.S. Senate and State Senate had to stay up in the wee hours of Wednesday morning to get final results.

Even newsreporters had to call candidates the next morning to find the final totals in the 45-member community Tenth Congressional District and the State Senate district which ranges from Weymouth to Duxbury.

Due to time constraints the Mariner could not talk to all the candidates. Here is our best account of what happened Tuesday night.

This report was compiled by newswriters Mike Berger, Judy Gilman, Lou Levin Cutler and Jane Lane.

CONGRESSIONAL RACE

He has survived... the pressure and the press... and the strain and agony of accusations of having a homosexual affair with a Congressional page.

With cheers from his supporters and tears in the eyes of some staff members at 11:15 p.m., Gerry Studds defeated Plymouth County Sheriff Peter Flynn and political newcomer Christopher Trundy in the Democratic Congressional Primary race.

Studds had 47,866 vote or 61.03 percent of the total vote, Flynn, 27, 381 or 34.91 percent of the vote and Trundy had 3,179 votes or 4.05 percent of the vote.

One Studds staff member summed it up, "It feels good tonight but we never knew what was going to happen. Sure, we were very worried... you never know what the voters are going to do."

By 10:20 p.m. the Flynn campaign headquarters announced it looked to them like a 60 to 40 percent Studds over Flynn victory and Flynn would be arriving soon for a concession speech.

But the Studds election party was not ready to claim victory, waiting instead for more paper ballots to come in from the Cape and South Shore areas.

Studds carried almost every town in the district except for Hanson, Hanover and Kingston.

Studds carried Hingham with 51 percent of the vote and that victory is significant. That victory drew one of the loudest claps of the evening from campaign work-transactions over $10,000. The authorized exempt list is checked immediately, and if a report is required, it is filled out immediately by the teller or customer service representative handling the transaction.

Spence said the one-sided form takes about three to five minutes to fill out and is signed by the branch manager, with a copy sent to the main office. Cash logs are brought to the main office once a month, and the data is fed into a computer.

While "very few" reports were filled out during the period of the alledged violations, 72 have been filed so far this year (through Aug. 10), Spence reported.

The exempt list, he said, now contains 99 customers, compared to the 60 to 70 it named before the investigation (the vast majority of the customers added to the list are old customers who were added by the bank after the investigation began).

The $50,000 fine will come from shareholder's profits, but bank treasurer Alan Peterson said the fine is "a small number compared to the bank's earnings" for the year.

Spence said customer reaction to the case has been one of support. "A substantial number of people have called up or taken the time to write a letter, and I'd like to thank them for their support in what has been a very difficult time."

Spence said the bank has "a great deal of faith" in its employees, and he hopes to relegate the incident to the yellowed pages of the history books and get back to business. "We have a very good record over our 77 years of business . . . we'd like to get this behind us. It has been a tough, difficult situation."

Week review

We've said it before, and we'll say it again. The proposed housing facility for Intermediate Care mentally retarded adults is a great chance for Cohasset.

We are the only community in the surrounding area without any program aimed specifically for the retarded citizens. It's about time we take the first step in accepting that moral obligation and welcome this facility and its residents into our community.

State figures relate that three percent of the population are mentally handicapped. Some of those being assisted within this program will be current and future Cohasset residents.

The home will be located upon the crest of a hill located on Crocker Lane. It's former Department of Public Works land off Route 3A. There, eight residents will feel secluded, yet included in a bustling town with many recreational activities and locations for everyone to share.

This week we would also like to comment on our high school fall sports schedule which is brimming with activity.

When Prop. 2 1/2 came along, it looked like the demise of school sports. But Cohasset has survived rather well, considering we are still under a limited budget.

With soccer, field hockey and football in full bloom, there appears to be enough organized sports for just about everyone.

Now it's our turn to support our kids and show them Cohasset is proud of all its athletes.

Town Clerk Frances Marks and her associate Constance Hughes looked a bit worn Wednesday morning but were as cordial as ever.

Everything pertaining to Tuesday's election went along well, Mrs. Marks commented, despite some frustrating moments brought about by a much too sensitive ballot counter. Election results were completed about midnight, but would have been tabulated sooner if not for that troublesome machine, she added.

The bad news is that the counter is on the way out, with not much time left to give to future elections. Mrs. Marks said after talking with a manufacturer's representative, the town would be better off purchasing a new machine.

So, it's on to November, but first a quick stop at the Advisory Committee.

The date has been set, so don't forget. The special Town Meeting (they're really not that special now that they come every couple of months) is set for November 19. Selectmen promise it will be brief.

Make a point to attend.

"...It's the Feds...how about we offer them $24, throw in some trinkets, baubles and beads? It worked real well for Manhattan..."

When will they stop embarrassing us?

By Claire McDonough

Flora held up a tiny pinafore. "I can't wait to see this on my granddaughter," she smiled.

"It's lovely," I agreed, "but are you sure white ruffles are practical for a six month old?"

She shrugged. "What's the difference. No matter what I buy, it'll look like something out of the compactor 15 minutes after she has it on."

Fauna sighed. "Tell me about it. How come when a child is wearing something new, everything it drops lands on the new garment. If it's wearing something old, everything it drops lands on the rug."

"It's some natural law," I told her. "And there's more to it. Have you ever noticed that you never see the worst dirt on your kid until you're with someone you want to impress?"

Flora nodded. "I remember taking Fern to the pediatrician when she was a baby. I'd have her dressed in her adorable best, and her hair would be shampooed till it gleamed. Then we'd go into the doctor's office, and a ray of light would shine on her head, and we'd see dirt in her ears."

"Dirt in the ears is nothing," Fauna told her. "Embarrassing, but unimportant. For real humiliation, try getting a note from your kid's teacher saying he hasn't had clean fingernails in a week.

"Then try explaining that you check his nails every morning, but you didn't know till yesterday that he has a toad farm in the backyard and he has to check it out before the school bus comes."

We all shuddered.

"That's almost as bad as when they swear," I told her. "I remember one time when the pastor came to visit, and my innocent-looking three year old let loose with a string of words that took the starch right out of the good man's clerical collar. Some of them were even new to me. I knew he was thinking, 'that poor child must hear that terrible language from her parents.' I knew perfectly well she'd picked it up from the mailman, but try telling anyone that."

We looked at each other glumly.

"When do they stop embarrassing you?" Fauna asked.

"If I ever find out, I'll tell you," I said.

"For example, we just spent a small fortune on clothes for one of our boys. Forty dollars for sneakers, for heaven's sake.

"Then Sunday he served on the altar when the bishop said Mass. I saw his feet when he knelt down, and they looked like something out of a 'Send This Boy to Camp' poster.

"He told me later that his good sneakers were muddy from playing football. I spent the entire Mass worrying about whether his feet would show up in someone's pictures."

"Did they?" Flora asked.

"Of course. Just like you could tell in his class picture that there was a button missing from his shirt.

"I did luck out on one thing, though," I smiled. "You couldn't see that his socks didn't match."

Fauna grimaced. "When I was entertaining our pastor, Bambi came in and announced loudly that I would be so proud of her. She had turned her shirt inside out so the dirt wouldn't show."

"Kids," Flora sighed. "They just never stop humiliating you."

We nodded in agreement.

Just then, Flora's daughter Fern came into the room.

"Hi, honey," Flora said brightly. "That's a wicked deadly blouse you have on."

Fern turned crimson. "Really, mother! No one says 'wicked deadly' when something looks nice any more.

"And do you have to wear those shoes? I mean, it's all right in the house, I suppose. But what if some of my friends drop by?"

I tucked my feet under me. I didn't want Fern telling any of my daughters I was wearing the same kind of shoes Flora was.

Fauna buttoned her jacket so you couldn't see that her polyester slacks had an elasticised waist.

We sat in guilty silence for a minute or two, then we heard Fern on the telephone in the next room.

"Really, Bambi," she was saying, "it's just so humiliating. At what age do your parents stop embarrassing you?"

ers who said the Hingham residents have been very vocal against "Gerry on the moral issue."

In Cohasset, Studds's voting residence, he carried the vote by a 646-384 margin over Flynn but Republican candidate Lewis Crampton, also no stranger to Cohasset, topped the Republican ticket with 563 votes.

Studds said there had been a lot of wonderful election evenings but "there's no way any of them felt as good as tonight."

He said opponents had said back in 1972 "we couldn't do it and we did it... and we will do it again."

He also added, commenting on President Ronald Reagan, "This nation is ruled a man who does not reflect the views of most of the people of this nation... a man who is backing us into a war in Central America, a man who does not reflect the values of this nation.

Studds cautioned his supporters there were still seven more weeks to go and "That this fight will be one of our toughtest... similiar to the race in 1972," referring to his defeat of Republican Bill Weeks when he first won the seat.

LEW CRAMPTON

Plymouth headquarters for Republican Lew Crampton suddenly filled with television and newspaper reporters as soon as election results trickled in. Suddenly, Crampton has emerged as The Opponent, preparing for a rigorous campaign against his Democratic opponent.

Early Wednesday morning Crampton was eager to begin a renewed attack, bolstered by his overwhelming support from Republican voters.

As he prepared for November's target, Crampton talked enthusiastically about the months ahead. He is confident, eager and optimistic about his immediate political future.

"We looked really good in the South Shore. If I can hold onto the Republican base on the Cape, which is largely conservative, I think I'll be looking really strong," he said, his conversation brimming with intense anticipation.

The Republican candidate said the key to his victory in two months will be his ability to convert the Flynn voters to his campaign. Already, he said, workers from that Democratic organization have called and offered their support.

"I'm really confident that if I can get a majority of the Democratic votes that didn't go to Studds, we'll look strong for November," he said, adding that during the campaign he will concentrate on the "Three E's . . . economics, environment and (Studds') effectiveness."

The Plymouth Republican has repeatedly stressed his opponent's inability to deal with the Republican administration in issues other than the ocean. "Take Studds out of the water and he can't get anything done for this district. A good Congressman walks on land, too," according to the former EPA administrator.

Crampton said he has already requested the League of Women Voters establish at least one debate per district between himself and Studds before the November election.

WILLIAM GOLDEN

With 62 percent of the vote in his column in his seven-town district, Bill Golden was a tired but very happy winner Wednesday morning.

"I'm very grateful to the residents of all seven towns of the district who endorsed me by a significant margin," he said in a telephone interview. "I have to thank the hundreds of volunteers in each town who got to know me at coffees and house parties and then played their hearts out for me. We had no paid staff for the campaign, it was all volunteer," he added.

"Sometimes it's difficult for a candidate to communicate just who and what he is to the voters. My volunteers helped carry that message wonderfully. The candidate is no better than the people he has around him and the issues he stands for," Golden said.

He looks ahead to a "positive, issue-oriented campaign" in the November general election against GOP candidate Anna Doherty, an attorney from Marshfield. "The region has many problems that have to be addressed."

Monday morning the Mariner received a letter from the Weymouth Police Superior Officers Association disputing Golden's claim that he was being supported by the Weymouth Police Association. Golden explained Wednesday morning that the association's president, James Cassidy, is the authorized representative of the association in attending meetings of the Weymouth Political Action Coalition (not a political action committee, a campaign-funding mechanism, as was alleged in the letter) and casting a vote to support a particular candidate. Golden said both he and his opponent Rick Walsh were interviewed by about eight members of the Weymouth coalition. After that interview, Golden was endorsed by the police association.

Debate on religion/politics

Letters

To the Editor:

It is my conviction, first of all, that there is not a debate about religion and politics going on right now, but a political campaign. It is to the advantage of both political parties to act as if there were a debate, but it is highly unlikely that the real issues of religion and politics will be addressed either by the candidates or their supporters. Morever, statements like the recent ones by Roman Catholic Bishops and Protestant and Jewish clergy do little to clarify the issue. Such statements do more to draw political lines than to further genuine debate.

Where could such a debate begin? I believe that it must begin with a careful distinction between two sets of issues. On one hand is the issue of religion and politics; on the other is the issue of church and state. Regarding the first issue, it is surely clear to everyone that religion and politics cannot be separated. Our religious convictions are the deepest expressions of our values and ideals; our political convictions must and should reflect those values and ideals. One news commentator recently claimed that the Constitution requires the separation of religion and politics. He should have known better. No such separation could ever be made, much less enforced. What the Constitution does require is the separation of church and state — that is, the institutional forms in which religious and political visions are expressed. The separation of church and state is vital; the separation of religion and politics is impossible. The institutions must be separated; the ideals and visions cannot.

I believe that the current controversy confuses the issues, so that we cannot be sure whether a politician or a clergyperson is discussing religion and politics, or church and state. When the distinction is clear, and when representatives of the institutions of church and state have reaffirmed what the Constitution guarantees, then a real debate might be joined. The issues of such a debate would include these: How can a puralistic state guarantee religious liberty to all the believers and unbelievers who compose it? How can we ensure that the institutions of church and state (which include the institutions of political parties) be kept separate even as our political and religious values are intertwined? Or to address the specific issue of abortion and the law: How can the convictions of one religious institution and its members be expressed without compromising the convictions of others? In each of these issues, no good purpose is served by the continuing confusion between religion and politics (which must be joined) and church and state (which must be kept separate).

School calendar

Thursday, Sept. 20: Early Release Day.
Friday, Sept. 21: No School, PCEA Convention.
Dates to reserve on your calendar: Thursday, Oct. 4 — open house at Deer Hill; Wednesday, Oct. 10 — open house at Osgood; and Thursday, Oct. 18 —PSO orientation meeting for all parents.

Speaking of calendars, the PSO reports the 1984-85 school calendar is at the printer now and will be mailed out by the beginning of Octctober.

The Early Special Needs Class has started the year with a new twist.

As a project to develop language and motor skills, the group will take weekly horseback riding lessons. As luck has it, the class's student teacher, Susan Lowery, is an instructor. So the children cannot help but benefit from the Monday adventure.

Congratulations to two boys

A contest was held in kindergarten this week. The winners were those children who collected the most pictures of things that began with "B." Taylor Devin and Ryan McWilliams won the prizes. Taylor collected 89 pictures and Ryan collected 48.

Housing planned for retarded

will be instituted in which non profit human services organizations will vie for the contract to operate the facility. Organizations such as St. Coletta's, Cardinal Cushing and Survival, Inc. of Quincy best describe a well-run non profit human services agency, Lang stated.

The contractor-vendor will operate and staff the facility on a one-year contract basis. When asked if an annual contract might disrupt progress being made by the residents, Lang answered that vendors are rarely switched, and if that is done because of the inadequate services provided, most staff members shoose to remain with the newly-chosen contractor.

DMH will continue to monitor the operation and finances of the contractor-vendor.

One Cohasset resident inquired about the planned site of the facility, noting that Department of Public Works land, where a vacant storage shed is located, would be a more accessible, evenly-graded property. State officials noted that the former Nike property was not offered to DMH and is not available.

What is proposed is a triangular piece of property adjacent to the storage facility on Crocker Lane. There will be a post and rail fence surrounding the home, with a chain link barrier fence outlining the perimeters of the entire property. Such enclosures will be made to ensure that no residents can wander from the facility onto Crocker Lane or the congested Route 3A.

One resident suggested that DMH have its engineers survey the property, to detail the exact proportions, and to be aware of what is currently located on the property.

Tryouts for "Cinderella"

The Cohasset Dramatic Club's opening production of the 1984-85 community theater season will be an adaptation for stage of the classic tale "Cinderella," scheduled for performance on the Town Hall stage in December.

Tryouts for roles in "Cinderella" will be held this Sunday, Sept. 23, from 2 to 5 p.m. at the Town Hall.

Written specially for the cohasset Club's presentation by Rushworth Kidder, this setting of the traditional story will be in the form of an English "panto" featuring music, dancing, comedy and spectacle. This Christmas season production calls for a cast of about thirty actors and actresses of diverse ages, and will be family entertainment for all ages.

For this Sunday's tryouts, material for reading will be available at the time of the tryouts. South Shore area residents are invited to read for roles in "Cinderella."

With these will be some posters remaining from the previous season.

Election grant

The 1984 Special Election Task Force of the Democratic State Committee today announced the award of A Voter Registration Incentive Grant of $100 to Cohasset. This grant is one of 28 grants awarded across the state.

The Grant Program was initiated by the Democratic State Committee, to stimulate creative approches to voter registration by local Democratic Committees for both the Primary and the General Election.

The Democratic State Committee called Cohasset's proposal "ambitious and creative."

October 9 is the deadline for Voter Registration for the General Election. There are over one million unregistered voters in Massachusetts alone.

Cohasset school sports scene

By Lisa Shumaker

Cross Country

Cohasset lost their first meet against a tough Norwell squad. Jim Riley was Cohasset's first finisher. Paul Narkiewicz, the team's coach, attributed the loss to his team's inexperience.

Cohasset faces Whitman/Hanson High School Monday. Narkiewicz feels certain the team will show much improvement.

Varsity Football

The varsity football team opened their season Sunday at Hanover with a loss, 14-0. The offensive was not productive in the first half, and Cohasset couldn't establish their running game. However, in the second half, Cohasset moved the ball much better as quarterback, Troy Chatterton hit Danny Camardo, Jeff Aaron, and Jackie Cooper with short passes.

The entire defensive unit was very good, and improved as the game continued·Mark Lahive, Jeff Brown, Jay Contis, Floyd Hardwick, Danny Curran, and John Holland allied the defensive attack for Cohasset.

Jackie Cooper had an outstanding day both offensively and defensively and was Cohasset's most valuable player for the day. Sophmores, Jeff Soltesz, Liam Stanford, and Jeff Lydon, all played commendably for Cohasset.

Cohasset's next game will be Sept. 29 against umana in Cohasset. Cohasset's coach Phil Pisano, feels his team must improve their running game, but is confidant that Cohasset will win over their home opener.

The football team is staging a football clinic for kids in grades three through seven Saturday at 9:30 a.m. sponsored by the Cohasset Gridiron Club, all kids and parents that participate are invited to a barbeque following the clinic.

Boys' Varsity Soccer

The boys began their season defeating Harwich 4 to 0. Cohasset played a good solid game according to the team's coach Jon Anderson.

Mason Sandell had two goals for Cohasset, assisted by Kevin Leary on one and and by Michael Desantis on the other. Bobby Schultz also had two goals, both of which were assisted by Mason Sandell. John Reidy turned in a good game for Cohasset on defensive as well.

Against East Bridgewater Friday, Cohasset walked away with a victory 2-0. Both Mike DeSantis and Mason Sandell scored in the first half for Cohasset assisted by Bobby Shultz and Mark Crough.

Goalie, Billy McKenna, played well and picked up his second varsity shutout.

Tuesday, Cohasset faces Chatham in Cohasset, and Saturday Cohasset plays at Abington. Cohasset expects to do well in both of these games.

Girls' Varsity Soccer

Thursday, the girls opened their season with a loss against a tough East Bridgewater team 1-0. Cohasset played a very good game and dominated throughout most of the contest. Unfortunately, Cohasset's defense broke down and East Bridgewater sneaked in a goal.

Janet DiGirolamo, Amy Duncombe, Joanie Chisom, Carla Lucas, and Sara Seavey all played well. A good second half performance was had by Caitlin Staunton as well.

Tuesday, Cohasset faces off against the defending state champs, Duxbury. Cohasset's coach, Kennan Startzell, predicts, "Our team is ready for Duxbury and will do well against them." Thursday, Cohasset will try to beat Hanover. This game will be home, so come and watch!

Girls' Varsity Field Hockey

The girls played outstandingly last week defeating both of their opponents. Wednesday, Cohasset beat Middleboro under the lights on Middleboro's turf, 3 to 1. Cohasset continued their winning streak going as they defeated Abington on Friday in an exciting game, 2 to 0.

At Middleboro, Maureen Farren scored twice assisted on both by Ginny Nussdorfer and Maria Cahill had a goal as well. Vicki Spooner had a good game on offense. Halfbacks, Maria Cahill and Lee Sullivan, and fullbacks, Dina Potolicchio and Sandra Best, turned in great efforts for Cohasset. The entire team played exceptionally well in the second half.

Against Abington, Maureen Farren put on a fantastic show scoring two goals. Maureen was assisted by both Vicki Spooner and Lee Sullivan who had outstanding games also. The entire front line from Cohasset looked sharp throughout the game.

Cohasset will attempt to demolish East Bridgewater Tuesday at home and will travel to Scituate Thursday and try to do the same thing. Come and cheer them on to victory!

Community Center schedule

The end of September signals a return to bustling activity for the Cohasset Community Center. The rooms will once again be filled with a variety of courses for members of all ages. Twelve-week courses begin the week of Sept. 24, as well as several workshops and mini-courses. Register now at the Center, or call 383-0088 weekday mornings for information. Programs are available at the Center.

Youth courses include Bowling, for children K - three, Tuesday or Thursday afternoons, taught by Bill O'Connell. Karate, another long-standing favorite, with Bob Blaisdell and his staff, is offered Wednesday afternoons for children five - 12, grouped appropriately.

Gymnastics, for boys and girls ages three through high school, is taught by Ruthann Sargent weekday afternoons and on Saturdays. Very small classes provide individualized instruction for all ages right up to team level. Call the Center or consult your program for specific days and times for age and skill level. The youngest gymnasts can choose from several different courses. Tumble Tots will also be offered. Gym Tot Fitness, and Mom and Me (a joint venture between parent and child), along with action set to music in Creative Movement, all aim to increase your child's strength, coordination, balance, flexibility and natural rhythm.

A unique opportunity for very young children to begin language instruction can be found in Buenos Dias, Tuesday afternoons. Spanish language and culture will be taught by Ron Reilly to grades one -three from 4 to 5 p.m. and grades four - six from 5 to 6 p.m. Creative Writing with Deborah Zildjian aims to encourage imaginative expression and the enjoyment of creativity. Plan to attend Wednesdays 3 to 4 p.m. High school students annually find the SAT Preparation course to be an invaluable review before the big test. Small classes (max. 10 students) and individualized coaching make this five-week session successful. Gino DiGirolamo reviews Math Tuesday evenings, and Ron Emmons reviews English Thursdays evenings. The course begins Sept. 25 and 27 to be completed just in time for the SAT exam this fall.

Two exciting children's workshops are offered in October. Pat Boylan conducts a four week Puppet Making Workshop. Children will make rod puppets and marionettes, with the emphasis on performance. Marilyn Adams will teach a three-session workshop on making Pinatas. These short courses fill up fast, so call the Center this week for registration and details.

Adults and teens have many additional courses to choose from. Dennis Walsh will teach a Computer Course for the Novice Thursday evenings, using the computers at the high school. Paul Aronson teaches Tropical Fish as a Hobby on Tuesday evenings, covering all aspects of aquarium planning and ecology and tropical fish breeding and behavior. Mary Struzziero is returning by popular demand to teach her Quilting course Wednesday mornings. A sampler quilt will be completed during this ten-week course. A new six week course Monday evenings may improve your health. Mark Friedman's (MD PC) Quit Smoking Clinic will provide the method of stopping the nicotine habit and minimizing the unpleasant effects of withdrawal.

A new Chess Club will meet Wednesday evenings, and is open to new, learning, or accomplished chess players. Nancy Clapp offers a four-week Stenciling course Tuesday evenings or Thursday mornings. Learn to stencil walls, textiles, gift items and floors during the classes. Mary Kelly's Oriental Rug Making is a five-session course offered Tuesday mornings or Thursday evenings. You will create your own genuine, unique oriental rug. An eight-week course to enhance your property is Landscape Design with Betsy Hoopes. This is a participating workshop where you not only learn the basics of landscape design, but also develop a plan for your own property. Jan Chatfield teaches Antiques Monday mornings. Her course teaches the development of design in furniture and complimentary items; it helps you see what is "real" and "good." Collectibles are also discussed.

Second Congregational Church

Our volunteer choir is an opportunity to take an active part in your church. Please come and try it. Wednesday at 7:30 in Bates Hall. You'll find a warm welcome.

Welcome back, teachers and students, for another good year of learning and growing in Church School. Classes will begin Sept. 23.

The following help is needed for the Village Fair:

The Boutique Table, chaired by Marsha Silvia and Carol Sandblom, needs volunteers to do crafty, creative things in Bates Hall each Tuesday evening — or to take projects home. Contact Carol, 383-1812, or Marsha, 383-0500, for more information.

The Children's Table, chaired by Claudia Story and Annette Sawchuk, needs workers for the Children's Table each Wednesday, from 9:15 ro 11:30 in Bates Hall. Donations of fabric for the projects will be welcome. Call Claudia, 383-6976, for information.

Plant Table. Plant Table of the Village Fair to be known as the Potting Shed, needs the following items:

1. Small, clear bottles with screw on tops.
2. Bulb pots — either clay or pottery.
3. Slips of any and all plants — also holly.
4. Slips of herbs, or herb plants.

Also, if anyone could donate herb seeds, we would be most grateful. Call Mary Campbell, 383-0569, or Fran Walton, 383-1798, for pick up.

Church School Opens

The Second Congregational Church in Cohasset, which was founded 160 years ago as a set of Bible classes for adults and children, has announced the opening of this year's church school program.

Making use of a curriculum developed by ten Protestant denominations, the church school is intended to provide its students with an understanding of the stories of the Bible and their meaning in our lives.

Lessons, activities, and participation in worship services all play a part in the program, led by volunteer teachers under the direction of the Christian Education Committee of the church.

Cohasset families who have not found a church home are welcome to participate in the church school, which meets on Sundays at 10 a.m. Classes are scheduled for all ages from three years old to junior high school.

Canning test

Canning this season?

If so, be sure to have a dial gauge tested on the pressure canner. Gauge inaccuracy could cause spoiled food problems. Pressure gauges should be tested every year to insure proper sealing and safety of preserved foods.

Contact Liz O'Donoghue at the Plymouth County Extension Service to have a gauge tested free-of-charge. The Extention Service is located on High St., Hanson, 293-3541 or 746-0053.

Bring your lid only with the gauge. Don't delay, the preservation season is at hand.

from the kitchen

By Joan Pinkham

"It is the province of the housewife to be of haste thoughts, stout courage, patient, untyred, watchfull, dilligent, witty, pleasant, constant in friendship, wise in discourse but not frequent therein." You may be sure this is no modern cookbook which Kathryn Dwight loaned me. "The Compleat American Housewife of 1776" is a fun peek into colonial kitchens; their complex food preparations, elaborate meals and grueling tasks. Their section on cranberries says: "The Indians use them much, boyling them with Sugar for Sauce to eat with their Meat and it is a delicate Sauce, but expensive because of the sweetening required." Now that we can just trot off to the supermarket, making Dot Catrambone's sauce is quick and easy. Dot says it's "exquisite" over pound cake, ice cream or cheesecake, so for want of a better title, I guess we'll just call it

DOT'S CRANBERRY SAUCE

1 can whole cranberry sauce, melted. Add
2 T grated orange peel
1 c. orange-flavored liqueur; Triple Sec, or Grand Marnier
4 slices orange
Simmer 20 min. Best if prepared the day before serving.

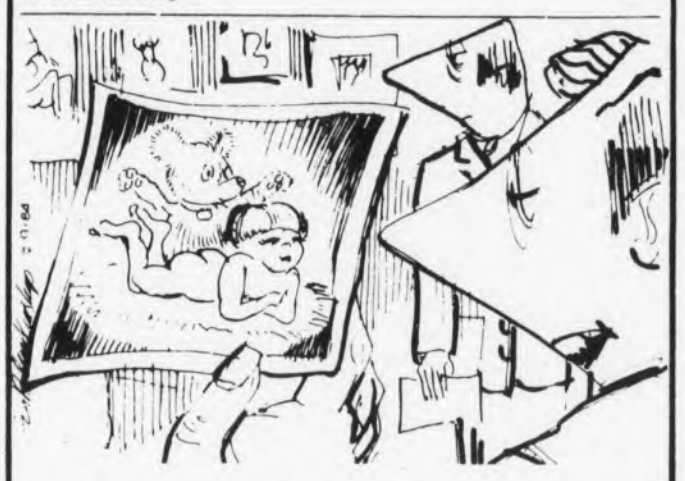
In a chapter called "What Our Leaders Chuse to Eat," they tell of Thomas Jefferson (in spelling which is theirs, not mine), saying: "He entertains grandly and has himself introduced some of the refinements of European cooking to America. From France he has brought receipts for blanc mange and meringues; from Holland he has born home a waffle iron and from Italy he has brought a noodle called Neapolitan maccaroni." There are no plantations here on the South Shore, no retinue of servants, but we do have "Celebrations Unlimited" to turn to when it's party time. Anne Abbruzese and Carol Walls started out together four years ago when they not only catered weddings, dinners and other big affairs, but prepared buffet meals for stars and their entourage who performed at the Music Circus in Cohasset. After serving performers such as Harry Belafonte, Roberta Flack, Frankie Valley and Steve and Edie Lawrence, they concluded that "the bigger the star, the nicer they are." The girls are so busy with their catering service now that other arrangements have been made for Music Circus meals, but they've taken time to share this dish which can be served as an antipasto, or hors d'oeuvre.

EGGPLANT ROLLS



2 slender eggplants, approximately 1¼ lbs. each
2 tsp. salt
1 can Pastene tomatoes, 1 lb. size
1/2 c. sliced scallion tips
3/4 c. olive oil
1 tsp. each dried basil and sugar
2 tsp. fresh lemon juice
Freshly ground pepper
10 slices Prosciutto, paper thin
8 oz. Mozzarella cheese

Peel eggplant, cut each lengthwise into even slices. Sprinkle with salt, let sit 30 min. Warm 1 T olive oil in medium skillet. Add tomatoes, sugar, basil, scallions, lemon juice and pepper. Simmer, covered, 15 min. and remove from heat.

Rinse eggplant. Spread on oiled baking sheet. Brush each slice with olive oil. Bake 7 to 8 min. each side at 350 degrees. Spread on wax paper and cool to room temperature. Assemble roll ups as follows: 1 slice egg plant, pour a thin layer of tomato sauce, 1 slice Prosciutto and Mozzarella on each. Roll and skewer with round tooth picks. Cut into thirds for hors d'oeuvres and serve at room temperature.

Blankenship

"...Well, so much for the nude shot we were going to publish of Miss America..."

Angler's corner

By George Doucette

This time of year makes even the wary 50 pound striper less cautious and more apt to hit a surface or swimming plug; one that he would have passed up only a few weeks before. Bluefish in the 20 to 25 pound class are the last of the species to leave. Many 15 pound plus weakfish or squeteague will be around on Cape Cod and Martha's Vineyard beaches well into September and October.

When you walk the beaches watch for schools of baitfish with terns, heron and seagulls hovering over them. Birds diving into the surf usually means feeding game fish and action for the fisherman, who will be rewarded with the last cast of summer.

The bluefish blitz continues in high gear all along the coast and will for a few more weeks (at least).

Striped bass are beginning to show up in schooling numbers and as the blues leave will move into the beaches to feed on evening tides. (Good tides this week for night stripers.)

Cod are moving and feeding more heavily this past week and this will improve steadily all month and into October and November. (Try the North River area, two miles off the cliffs.)

Winter flounder fishing will improve with cooling temperatures and should be good in the bays this month. (Duxbury Bridge at Powder Point is the fall hot spot.)

Tautog will be back on the move in late September. These fish are some of the best tasting fare you can get. Use clams fished on the bottom.

Prenatal Exercise

The Cohasset Community Center now offers an exercise class specifically designed for pregnant women.

Increasing strength, flexibility, and endurance is extremely helpful particularly for the prenatal woman, as this is a period in her life when physical well-being takes on a new significance. The improved circulation which results from routine exercise will minimize ones risk of fluid retention.

Other benefits of a dedicated exercise regimen include an increased energy level resulting from the improved ability of the heart to accommodate the increased blood volume. Pregnancy is a difficult time for women. Exercise along with good nutrition will help to make this period the truly positive experience it should be.

The next class starts Monday Sept. 23 at the Cohasset Community Center at 7:15 pm. For more information contact the Cohasset Community Center Monday-Friday from 9 a.m.-1 p.m. or call Deborah Ketchum at 383-0073.

Painting Workshop

Rosalind Farbush's one day intensive workshop Figure in a Painting will zero in on the study of how to integrate the clothed figure or figures in an interior setting.

The South Shore Art Center, 103 Ripley Road in Cohasset, is offering this one day course Saturday, Sept. 29 from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. to all levels of artistic ability. Workshop members should have basic drawing and painting skills.

Students may select the medium they wish to use. Farbush's extensive painting background will be most beneficial in working with the students.

She has a cerificate from the Museum of Fine Arts. She has instructed adult clases and for the City of Boston High School courses at the Museum of Fine Arts School. She exhibits in Boston and New York.

For complete information on this workshop, other Center classes, exhibits and memberships, contact the South Shore Art Center, 383-9548.

Cohasset artists funding

The Massachusetts Arts Lottery Council has once again made money available to the Cohasset Arts Lottery Council for distribution to Cohasset artists and organizations.

This funding period there is approximately $1600 available. Applications are available at the Cohasset TownHall, clerk's office. All applications must be filed by Oct. 15, 1984.

Applications are then reviewed by the arts lottery committee, Cohasset residents, Linda Stearns Halloran, Sigrid Carey, Helen Ketchum, Thomas Lucas and Larry Fone.

You are urged to apply, both individual artists and organizations.

Those applications funded for the last period were Folio Magazine, The South Shore Arts Center, and The Cohasset Historical Society. The basic criteria is artistic contributions to our community.

For further details, call Larry Fone, 383-0898 after 6:30 p.m. week days.

Other continuing programs for children are Bowling, Creative Movement, Horseback Riding, Karate, S A T Preparation, Pinata Workshops and Puppet Making, along with a new Spanish Program for Children.

A CPR class will be offered on Wednesday, Oct. 10 and 17 from 7 to 11 p.m. as well as a Six Week Quit Smoking Clinic on Monday evenings from 7 to 8 p.m. Fitness classes offered on a continued basis are Joanne Sheppard's Total Fitness Class, Joanne Lehr's Evening Aerobics and Debra Ketchum's Pre-Natal Exercise.

Candidates corner

Fight against drugs

The Concerned Citizens for Drug Prevention, Inc., in an effort to thank public officials, presented plaques of appreciation for their support in the fight against drugs.

Ray Shamie, Republican Candidate for the United States Senate; State Representative Mary Jeanette Murray (R), Cohasset, Hingham and Hull; State Representative William J. Flynn, Jr. (D), Hanover, Norwell and Rockland; State Senator Edward Kirby (R), the Second Plymouth Senatorial District and Plymouth County Sheriff Peter Flynn, were presented awards.

All of the above have worked diligently in support of legislation and other activities of the CCDP, Inc., against drug abuse.

Anna Doherty

Anna Doherty spoke to the Sept. 12 meeting of the Duxbury Women's Republican Club about her campaign and the work needed to elect a Republican from this district to the State Senate.

Acknowledging that there are more registered Democrats than Republicans in the district, Doherty said by attracting the independent vote, the Republicans can win this senate seat.

"We must point out to the Independent voters our basic difference in attitude toward the role of state government," Doherty declared.

"The Democrat says that if we give more money to the bureaucrats at DEQE and the Department of Education they will solve our problems of pollution and poor schools. I believe the state collects enough of your money now. We need to put limits on state spending and return tax revenues to the towns where you control local schools and services," Doherty said.

William Golden

The North River Valley Conservation Commission has announced the unanimous selection of State Senate Candidate William Golden of Weymouth as its "Man of the Year."

In announcing the commission's selection, Chairman David Tilley, Jr., stated that Mr. Golden was selected for the award because of his "years of environmental concern and contribution to the combination of modern technology with sound environmental practice."

A former city solicitor, Golden sued the MDC and other state agencies which resulted in a court-ordered 10 year cleanup plan for Boston Harbor and South Shore Bays. Golden, additionally, is the founder of the South Shore Coalition for Clean Water, an organization of environmental activists and local citizens who have consistently lobbied Beacon Hill to end the pollution of South Shore waters.

The genuine volunteerism of a campaign worker

By Lois Martin

They are the unsung heroes of political campaigns. Theirs are the voices you don't hear in lengthy debate or in gilded television commercials.

They are the followers. And I take off my hat, a nonpartisan one here, to them.

You and I know perfectly well there's no such thing as a leader without followers. Somebody's got to pull and board the bandwagon. That person is not the candidate. He or she had something to do with building it and certainly making it look good. But getting on board . . . that's done by those unredoubtables who go out on a limb and much more for the candidate of their choice.

PATCHES

I was headed downtown in Saturday's drizzle when I spotted one of them. He was holding a Rick Walsh sign for State Senate and he'd positioned himself on precarious footing inside the triangle by the traffic light. From there he waved as rain spouted off his nose and chin.

This man could have been cooling it over a hot cup of coffee, reading his paper, running his errands or watching a football game. Instead he stood in the rain and waved to strangers while risking the odds that as ardent a follower from an opposing camp could swamp him in a puddle.

One of the favorite haunts for the supporters is that spot by the Expressway. You talk about danger. Never mind the traffic hazard on Rte. 139, think about posting all those sign carriers of different persuasions so close together.

A unique quality of the campaign worker is his genuine volunteerism. I've heard them say they were 'busy,' but I've never heard them complain about what they are doing. They like the meetings. They take on their tasks of licking envelopes, making telephone calls, marking off Precincts with absolute dedication.

And there's a good chance that many a candidate was elected because of a follower.

I talked with a couple women who are veteran campaigners. For years they've held signs, attended fundraisers and endorsed people for public office. They said they've held those signs in all manner of conditions. There are the friendly supporters of opponents, they say, who'll watch your sign for you if you have to leave briefly. And then there are those who make you feel you better not get out of the car.

And you have to have maturity I guess to make the reminder phone calls, asking people to vote for your candidate, straight out. One woman said she'd been told twice in a row once, "I wouldn't vote for that idiot if he were the only one running." Now into more than two decades of telephone campaigning she no longer breaks down after such calls.

Years ago I was akin to a local election campaign. I thought I was doing well, picking up the jargon, like when a person should "peak," though I'd have been more enraptured if they'd meant "peek."

I attended the meetings, participating in the bi-lingual nuances of savvy politicans as I dared. But I never passed the true test of the adequately immersed follower.

And the night Hank Aaron hit his record-setting home run, I burst into the meeting, spewing the good news all over the subcommittee members and was told "Lois, why don't you just go type something?"

She had a point. My perspective didn't qualify. I believed that Hank's moment should, in the light of life, interrupt for at least that length of time.

So I relapsed into myself. I started a diary of that particular campaign 10 years ago, thinking maybe someday I'd regale myself by recording "A Hometown Bandwagon."

But I've never ceased admiring that which I have not been, a truehearted, wholehearted, self-sacrificing campaigner. A voter I am, wouldn't miss it.

In this burgeoning campaign season we bear reminding. When we see those hardworking followers on the roadway in the early morning frost, we should give 'em a good wave. No need to make an abject poll promise but a smile is the least we could do. They're the ones who ultimately could be wearing those hats delegates don at the big conventions.

A couple years ago a commuter returning from a long day at the office boosted the spirits of sign holders near the Expressway when he mooned them. Most of us won't go that far (nor are we that agile in a compact car).

But that day by concensus, he got the vote of all the campaign supporters of seven different camps. And anyone who brings together that many disparate views may be the real leader of tomorrow.

Chamber director looks 'out for the best of business'

By Mike Berger

Disaster is full of lots of people in the background.

But it's obvious from his address to the Scituate Chamber of Commerce Monday night, Ron Zooleck of the South Shore Chamber isn't one of those people hiding his head in the sand.

Explaining his role as executive director of the South Shore Chamber as one of a lobbying nature, looking out for the best of business, Zooleck strongly opposed the governor's finance proposal for Mass. Bank, real estate classification tax and philosophies of "no-growth" in a town.

But he also spoke highly of the economic development potential of the South Shore and defended campaign Political Action Committee finance.

The South Shore Chamber of Commerce is a private, non-profit independent business organization. The group has a full-time lobbyist at the State House to examine all kinds of legislation affecting business.

"You better be concerned about what's going on across the water," he said, explaining the chamber's carefull eye on the State House.

Regarding Mass. Bank, Zooleck, a Hingham resident, said, off course business should support building new bridges and roads. "But why does business have to pay for it?

"The governor says he will lower the business unemployment compensation rate but he should do it anyway. Back when the fund needed money, business paid for it. Now he wants Mass. Bank to be paid by the business.

"Without Mass. Bank, he should lower the unemployment compensation rate," Zooleck said.

Business supported Proposition 2½ but now some communities are using classification tax procedures to tax business in some cases 150 percent above the tax rate, Zooleck said.

He also commented on the recently approved Right To Know legislation which requires industry to report to each community what chemicals are used.

"Did you know the original legislation had 100,000 items including the copier machine and the fluid in that machine?

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

With the use of Small Business Administration loans, 73 new companies were formed on the South Shore, creating 3500 new jobs.

"We live in a jewel of an area and we take it for granted. We must protect it," he said.

Zooleck said the Codex Corp of Canton wasn't given a fair shake from the state. The company went through every regulatory agency in the town and were given environmental rules and then were told by the state what to do.

"I believe it's a town's right to decide and I also believe in compromise. But you know what the best thing about Codex is? There are many, many new jobs there," Zooleck said.

Zooleck urged all businessmen to stand up and be counted when thoughts of no more growth are heard in a town.

He also urged chamber members not to turn the other cheek when a community's drug problems are aired. "You should be addressing the problem head on and working with your Police Department.

"The worst drug today is apathy and disaster is full of lots of people standing in the background," he said.

On the eve of election night, Zooleck said the notion taking PAC money is "tainted" - is "bull."

"What about taking money from unions and teachers associations. What are you an acorn? Show me how that's wrong? If it's wrong then the whole thing is wrong," he said.

Mariner gets a photographic 'two-fer'

Bill Quigley is the newest addition to the Mariner staff, and he comes as a two-fer. As an employee, but not old enough to drive until he's 16½, his mother Marge is a part of the package as his long-suffering chauffeur.

"Oh, sure," she said, "there are times when I say, 'For cripes sakes, we just went out. Not another time. I have other things to do."

"But," Bill added with a grin, "five minutes later she'll say, 'I'll be out in a minute.' "

Bill has his learner's permit now, and, come Feb. 7, when he gets to the magic age for driving on his own, his mother can relax a little more without being constantly prepared with the car keys in one hand and her coat in the other. "We got a new car July 18, and it already has 3,000 miles on it. And that's just from driving around town and taking Bill around," she said. "I tell him I spend half his earnings on coffee breaks."

Bill, now a sophomore at Hingham High, got his first camera for Christmas 1982, a Konica FP1. "The first day, I think I shot 10 roles of film," he recalls. He took his first news photos, of an accident up the street, a couple of weeks later. He didn't sell them, though. They're in his scrapbook.

But he was interested in news photography from the start and called Patriot Ledger photo editor Jerry McCullough for some tips. Bill took some photos of an accident in August of 1983 that the Ledger bought but didn't run.

He took some photos the next month of the newest delivery of Hingham police cruisers and sent some to Henry Bosworth, publisher of the Hingham Journal. After hearing nothing for a week, he gave the office a call, and Bosworth told him the paper could use some photography. "You have a darkroom?" he asked. Bill assured him he did.

Marge Quigley

He's already sold one photo to United Press International (of the building collapse in Norwell this summer) and has definitely been bitten by the news photography bug. The camera is a Nikon now, and there's always another lens he'd like to get. There's a CB scanner in the car and he carries a portable unit, as well.

What are his favorite photographs to take? Bill's fairly easygoing and says, "Oh, I like to do most everything." And everything is just what he's likely to encounter working for the Mariner.

Once upon a time, not so far away,

a brave Copper King built an enchanted kingdom in a land by the sea.

There in Scituate, he surrounded his mansion with idyllic pastures and formal gardens. Then built a fairy tale tower to watch over his dream.

Some said he was eccentric. Others said he was vain. But in truth, the legendary millionaire, Thomas Lawson, was building a beautiful haven as a gift for his beloved family. And in 1903, Dreamwold came true.

Now it's coming true again.

All the majesty, privacy and splendor that was Dreamwold. In twenty-six unique Victorian condominium residences encircling a spectacular rose garden and beautiful swimming pool.

Dreamwold. A magnificent blend of historic restoration and new construction as only Boston's premier developer, Parencorp, could do.

This summer, Dreamwold is available at pre-marketing prices, starting in the mid-100's. Visit Dreamwold between 11:00 AM and 6:00 PM daily for a personal presentation. Or call 545-0222 or 731-5570 for more information.

It's coming true again. The new Dreamwold. Soon to be a legend of its own.

South Shore Dinner Club

Q. The South Shore Dinner Club seems to have gained enormous popularity this past year. How many members do you have?
A. We currently have well over 4,000 members. We are particularly proud that almost 40% of our members joined as a result of a recommendation from a friend or relative who was already a member. We think that's quite an endorsement of the program we're offering!

Q. How did you come up with the idea?
A. Well, my wife and I had belonged to a Boston-based dinner club which was a great value and a lot of fun. After moving to Marshfield, however, we found that we didn't really take advantage of the club because of the hassles traveling up and back on the expressway at night. So we recognized an opportunity for a similar program right here on the South Shore and three years ago we established the enterprise.

Q. I notice you always say "we". Is the South Shore Dinner Club a family business?
A. Yes, very much so. As a matter of fact, my eight year old daughter licked so many stamps helping us last Christmas that she complained for two weeks that her meals tasted as though they were prepared by the Postmaster General!

Q. How do the participating restaurants feel about being associated with your dinner club?
A. Even though we are a small family run business, we are very professional in our management of the club and sincere in our commitment to the success of everyone involved. We have recently opened a suite of offices in Marshfield and have spent a tremendous amount of money this year in the marketing and organization of the dinner club. So I'm quite certain the restaurants know we're here to stay and that we do care. The fact that we are local and accessible is responsible for attracting the top area restaurants that we currently have.

Q. We can understand why your members are pleased to receive all those free dinners every year but what's in it for the restaurants?
A. You must remember, our program is two dinners for the price of one excluding liquor, appetizers, or desserts. With a high percentage of our cardholders ordering something extra, the restaurant can usually make some profit even after deducting the price of a complimentary entree. No business enjoys giving their product away gratis but the smart restauranteur appreciates the long-range, overall benefit of attracting 4,000 new couples to his establishment each year. It's the most effective advertising in the world because the restaurant doesn't need to pay for the advertisement, in this case the free dinner, until the people are actually trying his establishment.
The exposure, word-of-mouth recommendations, and repeat business are the obvious advantages. It's much, much better to break even on a couple of new patrons than to have an empty table. Without question, the biggest liability and the most expensive enemy in the restaurant business is an empty table. That's where we can really help.

Q. We wish the Dinner Club continued success.
A. Thank you.

Expansion set for Cohasset Heights

By Jane Lane

The state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE) has given limited, interim approval for Cohasset Heights Ltd. landfill to continue operation.

The state department, which regulates all landfill operations, attached several restrictions and conditions to the interim approval. The Barry Brothers, owners of Cohasset Heights Ltd., will be allowed to expand the landfill into designated Area III, for a period which should terminate in about two months.

In the meantime, the town is anticipating a draft of the hydrogeologic study conducted by Camp, Dresser and McKee to be prepared this week. That report, which was authorized at last January's special town meeting, will determine whether leachate (a liquid form of refuse) is flowing from the landfill into the town's Watershed Protection area, and whether that leachate is contaminated.

Although there is an involved history of litigation between the town and the landfill owners, all court action is in abeyance until the engineering report is completed. Water Commissioners and selectmen, who jointly sponsored the engineering project, are anxiously awaiting the final report.

It is expected that Camp, Dresser and McKee will conclude the final report within two months, coinciding with the termination of DEQE's landfill operation interim approval.

There are four designated areas of the landfill, two of which are currently filled to capacity. The landfill requested state approval to move its operation into Area III. It was about one year ago when Cohasset Heights requested the expansion. The town, fearful that leachate may be encroaching into the watershed, and realizing the need to keep a close watch on the daily operation, requested the assistance of a special counsel in the matter.

Attorney Charles Corkin of Boston has been representing the town in all legal matters pertaining to the Cohasset Heights landfill since that time.

There are essentially two town boards interested in this subject, the Board of Health and the Water Commission. Selectmen, as the town's policy makers, are officiating over the issue. The Board of Health is concerned about the procedural operations of the dump, while the Water Commissioners are cautious observers, attempting to protect the town's water supply from possible exterior contamination.

Staszko refiles Rte. 3A mall plans

Developer Donald Staszko has created a revised edition of his plans for a mini shopping mall at the corner of Sohier Street and Chief Justice Cushing Plaza.

The Planning Board, and later the Zoning Board of Appeals, denied the site application for the mall, which was presented a couple of months by Staszko. The basis of their rejection was the lack of adequate parking spaces within the proposed mall.

This plan, which engineers from A.J. Flynn Co. have devised, will have the adequate number of spaces, as dictated by town bylaw, according to Atty. Charles Humphreys who is representing the developer.

"The last time, the Planning Board told us we needed 10 spaces for every 1000 feet of building space. We told them the national average was four or five, and we had provided for six or seven. But they denied it and the zoning board denied our appeal," Humphreys explained.

The current plan is a reduction in scale from the former project, he said, and thus the number of required parking spaces is reduced. This plan has the correct number of parking spaces, as specified in the Cohasset bylaw, Humphreys noted, and will therefore not need any special variances or permits.

The plan will be presented to the Planning Board Oct. 1.

The mall, which will necessitate the demolition of the Cohasset Motors building, will include a 45,600 square foot supermarket as the "anchor" store. There will be six smaller stores, ranging in size from 2400 to 3400 square feet, and a bank. The total dimension of the mall will be 62,600 square feet, compared to the former

Developers plan for watershed development

By Lisa J. Messersmith

At the Planning Board meeting Wednesday, Sept. 19, Ed Brett and Engineer William Moore's plans to proceed with a development in the Lily Pond Watershed area were stalled pending the results of a study to be undertaken by the Board of Health. The study will "more clearly define" the limits of the Watershed and "the possible effects that any development...would have on water quality."

Despite the moratorium on development in the area, the planning board agreed to look over Brett's and Moore's preliminary site plans for King Street.

William Moore presented two possible site plans. The first was an L-shaped subdivision development of 36 lots on 36.9 acres.

The other possibility which the planning board appeared to favor over the subdivision, was a cluster development similar to The Meadows in Hingham. Each of the colonial style townhouses would cost between $225,000 and $250,000. Tennis courts, a swimming pool, and a clubhouse are planned. Moore stated that there is a "potential for high quality" in this development.

Planning board members expressed that they, too, were looking for high quality in landscaping and site plans. Member Robert Sturdy stated that the design should be such that the townhouses not look like a group of garage doors, similar to The Meadows design, he said.

Member Daniel Cotton favored design originality and the existing landscape of the site. Cotton suggested that Brett and Moore look into options of cluster development ownership.

He would like to see the owners "own more than the wallpaper."

John O'Toole mentioned the need for handicapped facilities and for more modest, lower priced homes.

After a review of the preliminary site plans, Chairman Chris Bassett concluded that she wanted to see a more complete plan. The plans presented did not provide "enough information," Bassett added.

Sturdy and Town Engineer John Modzelewski emphasized the problem of sewage, drainage, and disposal and their effect on the Lily Pond Watershed area. Sturdy explained the planning board's responsibility to protect Cohasset's water supply. To Sturdy and other members, the state's regulations concerning these problems must be taken several steps beyond the minimum requirements to protect the future water supply.

Modzelewski concluded that because Lily Pond is only a part of the Watershed area, the effect of the proposed development on the entire Watershed must be examined fully.

At the Board of Health meeting Monday members Barbara Kern and Marilyn Gill voted unanimously to support the Water Department's moratorium on any new development and further expansion on any existing development in the Lily Pond Watershed line area, pending the advice of town council.

Gill stressed the importance of Cohasset's water supply for the future security of the town. "To endanger the Watershed is such folly," stated Gill. In reference to increased development in the Lily Pond area, Gill added, "every house that goes up is a future lean on the quality of water."

As of this week the town has not hired a firm to

Household Hazardous Material Collection Day

The first Household Hazardous Material Collection Day was held last Saturday, Sept. 22. It was so successful that 21 barrels of hazardous materials were collected for proper disposal. Due to the overwhelming response, the collection site was forced to close early and turn away residents who had hazarrdous materials they wished to dispose of.

The collection contract with SCA was limited to $1,610.00. The limit for paint and other flammable materials was reached by noon. The other barrels were filled, and the site closed at 1:15 p.m.

"This was the first time we tried this, and we didn't know what the response would be. Even the SCA employees were surprised, both by the response and the types of materials received," said Jeff Bettinger. "At least we know that 21 barrels of hazardous materials will no longer be around to trouble Cohasset. Since we didn't get it all, we will start planning now for another collection this spring."

Among the items collected were; four barrels of flammable oils and solvents, eight barrels of oil based and lead based paints, one barrel of paint thinner, two barrels of acids, and three barrels containing DDT, Sevin, and Diazion, respectively. A separate pesticide barrel contained priority pollutants such as Lindane, Endrin, Methoxychlor, 2-4 D, and 2-4-5 TP.

The collection day was organized by the Hazardous Material Advisory Committee, and the members who worked on this project were; Jeff Bettinger, Chairman, Lot Bates, Gordon Deane, Victoria Crayken, Barbara Kern, and Chartis Langmaid. The Committee would also like to thank the Board of Health, Health Agent, Board of Selectmen, School Department, Fire Department, Boy Scouts, and the Cohasset League of Women Voters for their help.

While the majority of the funds were appropriated at the April town meeting, several local businesses helped to sponsor the collection. They were; Stop and Shop, R. W. Rosano, Haggerty Colonials, Cohasset Central Market, Renewable Investment Corporation, Goodwin Graphics, and Cohasset Cycle Sports.

These were among the wastes deposited during Saturday's Hazardous Waste Materials Day. (Jeff Bettinger)

System approval

The Board of Health granted permission to the representatives of a proposed residential facility for the mentally retarded to utilize an existing sewage system on Crockers Lane.

Engineer Rick Lanni dug test pits throughout the site and found an existing leaching field and septic system which includes three septic tanks. Lanni stated that the "system seems to be in very good shape," but that it has not had much use in recent years.

The five-bedroom facility will house eight mentally retarded clients and two staff people. In review of the facility's sewage needs, Health Agent Joseph Godzik recommended that Lanni receive permission to use half of the existing 2,400 square foot system.

The Board of Health suggested to Lanni that he clearly separate his proposed sewage system from the adjacent properties system, all of which is linked into one main system. Lanni agreed to the Board of Health's suggestion and will begin to inspect and upgrade the existing sewage system.

Planners review Autohaus/Bergsons developer

By Lisa J. Messersmith

The Planning Board asked the representatives of the New Bergsons Restaurant and the representatives of the new Autohaus, foreign car dealership, to attend last week's meeting Sept. 19 to discuss an easement granted by Bergsons to Autohaus.

Both Bergsons and Autohaus plan to expand their businesses across the street from the South Shore Bank. The easement allows Autohaus a right-of-way to a driveway on Bergsons' property. Both parties had agreed to the easement; however, the easement was not delineated on Bergsons' final plans.

Planning board members expressed their concern that the extra amount of pavement needed for Autohaus was not added into Bergsons' drainage calculations. Bergsons' engineer Robert Crawford assured the members that his calculations "took into account the drainage from the Autohaus site."

Developer Wayne Sawchuk stated he did not intend to hide anything from the planning board by not drawing in the easement. His plans were "totally above board," added Sawchuk. He explained that the drainage pipes designed for Bergsons were adequate to include the drainage from Autohaus.

Chairman Chris Bassett stated she wanted to see the easement drawn into Bergsons' plans. Bergsons agreed to include the easement in their final site plans.

In the continuation of their site plan review, representatives from Autohaus were also asked several questions concerning the easement. Autohaus Engineers from Loring Jacobs Co. and Architect Kevin Schopfer informed the planning board that a traffic study had been completed and the results showed that the common driveway was more than adequate to handle the traffic flow from both businesses.

Another concern to board members was the natural drainage pattern which allows water to flow from Autohaus' property onto Bergsons' property. Heavy rain fall and melting snow and ice could possibly overwhelm Bergsons' drainage capacity. Planning members stated engineers from Autohaus said studies were completed for ten-year storms, and the calculations revealed Bergsons' capacity to be more than adequate to handle the run off from Autohaus.

Town Engineer John Modzelewski attended the meeting to voice his opinion on the drainage issue. He suggested that the water flow from Autohaus onto Bergsons' property might be an "infringement on somebody else's rights." He wants to see a more thorough study to include calculations for a 100-year storm. If these calculations show that the runoff increases, Bergsons and Autohaus will make an agreement to settle any future drainage problems together.

As a result of the previous week's meeting Sept. 12, Autohaus submitted to the planning board lighting, landscaping and security plans.

William Pressley, landscape architect for Autohaus, proposed a plan to install eighteen, thirty-foot metal light fixtures in the parking area of the dealership.

The higher lighting was chosen because of its maximum illumination capacityon the automobiles for security and sales purposes. The lights themselves will be placed well into the trees around the parking area so as not to give the effect of a "tree farm of poles."

Member John O'Toole requested the locations of similar light fixtures which Pressley has designed.

Pressley also presented a landscaping plan for the view of the site from Route 3A. All the trees on the site have been located, and according to a clause in the plans, the architects may "selectively trim and prune" those trees which they believe interrupt the sight lines to the building's showroom.

Member Robert Sturdy felt that this clause left too much room for the architects to cut out every tree if they chose to do so. After considerable discussion, Pressley agreed to retain forty percent of the existing tree count and replace some of those larger trees with three-foot trees and shrubs.

The planning board agreed to approve the preliminary site plans for Autohaus provided Pressley submit a satisfactory plan for the trees, the engineers include drainage calculations for a 100-year storm, and that the

DEQE approves dump expansion

Water Commissioner Peter Pratt said this week all action against the landfill owners will be stalled until the hydrogeologic report is reviewed by the town, and a final report is completed. They will then rely upon the recommendation of Special Counsel Corkin as to their course of action.

Depending on the results of the study, the Water Commissioners will probably recommend some form of multi-year inspection program for the landfill to be supervised by the local Board of Health, Pratt said.

The commissioners are anxious to review the draft this week, Pratt said, noting " this landfill may turn into the town's greatest single non-operation expenditure in its history."

He explained that the hydrogeologic study cost the town $30,000, and the years of legal effort exercised by town counsel and Atty. Corkin have added to the expense borne by the town. If one were to compute the number of manhours provided by the Water Commissioners, Health Board and Health Agent, the costs for protecting the town against the landfill operation will be exorbitant, Pratt added.

DEQE inspected the landfill site this summer, accompanied by former Health Agent Elaine Eliopolous and selectman Rocco Laugelle. Based on that inspection tour, DEQE officials granted the interim expansion approval, which they estimate will be two months in length.

Among the several technical conditions attached to DEQE's approval was a requirement that leachate found on the site be recirculated into the active face of the landfill during the two-month interim operation.

Several other restrictions were placed on the dump's operation, many of which were recommended by the town in its initial litigation against Cohasset Heights Ltd.

The Board of Health has direct authority over the landfill's operation procedures. Within two months, it is the town's intention to decide, based on the Camp, Dresser and McKee report, whether to recommend a permanent expansion, or to place further restrictions on the site. All restrictions would be enforced by the local health board.

The Conservation Commission is also a party to the town's concerns, in its efforts to preserve the quality of the wetlands situated directly behind the landfill site.

As Water Commissioner Pratt noted, "it was the mistake by the Board of Selectmen in the mid-1970's (to allow the original landfill operation) that the town of Cohasset is now spending money to alleviate."

New mall design

plans for 73,000 square feet of building.

Since the zoning board's rejection, the Flynn Co. engineers have been redesigning the original plan. Modifications were reviewed by prespective tenants, Humphreys said, so that engineering schemes coincided with business necessities.

The only firm tenant is a supermarket company, he added, with negotiations continuing with several clients for rented space within the mall.

If the revised plans are approved by the Planning Board, construction will commence immediately after all necessary permits are obtained. Humphreys said it would be difficult to say when the mall would be completed because of the unpredictable winter weather, but an estimate would be about nine months after construction start, he said.

Although the mall is smaller in scope than the original project, it was never Staszko's intentions to abandon the development. "It was something he felt the area needed, and he wanted to stick with it," the attorney explained.

conduct the study which will more clearly define the limits of the Watershed and the effects developments might have on water quality. The Board of Health plans to be involved in the interview selection process for possible candidates to conduct the study.

The Board of Health also plans to "use very strong discretionary powers," stated Kern, when reviewing future plans for the Watershed area. Members will also recommend to the Water Department and Town Council that a moratorium be placed on any developments within a 1,000 foot radius of any town wells.

1974 Reunion

The Tenth Year Reunion of the Cohasset High School class of 1974 will be held Sept. 29 at the Cohasset Golf Club. The reunion will begin at 6:30 p.m. For further information, call Kerry Duggan at 383-1603.

Town Common meeting

The Cohasset Common Historic District Commission had invited the Tree and Park Superintendent, the Historic Commission and interested citizens to its monthly meeting Oct. 2 at 8:00 p.m. at the Town Hall

The purpose of this meeting is to discuss the restoration of the Cohasset Town Common. Any ideas concerning this matter would be welcome. The Town has applied for a special state grant to help fund this project.

Scholarship finalists

Cohasset students who will receive Letters of Commendation from the National Merit Scholarship Corp. are: Christopher Crowley, Michael A. DeSantis, Gregory P. Igo, Mark S. Lahive, William A. Langmaid, Nora M. Leary, Mason E. Sandell and Garin Walsh.

The following two students are Semifinalists in the competition for Merit Scholarships to be offered in 1985: Elizabeth Riley and Staci A. Stobart.

Over one million students entered the 1985 Merit Program by taking the PSAT/NMSQT in 1983. Of two groups honored in each annual Merit Program, the larger one includes approximately 36,000 students who are commended for high performance. Commended students placed in the top five percent of all participants, however, they do not continue in the competition for Merit Scholarships because they score slightly below their State's Semifinalist qualifying score.

In April, the names of Merit Scholarship winners will be announced.

Many of the Center's fall courses are filled but a few still have room including the ones which have been rescheduled to begin a week later. Other classes with space available are Albert Abany's Oil and Acrylic Painting, beginning Wednesday, Sept. 26, 12:30 to 3 p.m.; Judeth Van Hamm Weir's Portrait Painting, Wednesday, Sept. 26, 7:30 to 10 p.m.; and Abany's Drawing from Nature, Thursday, Sept. 27, 12:30 to 3 p.m.

Two children's classes still have space available — Serena Brundige's Multi-media Workshop, Tuesday, Sept. 25, 4 to 5:30 p.m. and Lisbeth Koopman-Wyman's Color, Textures and Shapes, Wednesday, Sept. 26, 3:30 to 5 p.m.

Open House

The Hull Lifesaving Museum invites all residents of Cohasset to an Open House at the Museum, Sunday Sept. 30 from 3 to 6 p.m.

The Museum is located in the Point Allerton Lifesaving Station, 1117 Nantasket Avenue. It's the white building with the red roof.

Judy Wiers, the museum director, will give a talk at 4:30 p.m. on the history of the Museum and plans for the future. Refreshments will be served.

Spring cleanup

At the next Special Town Meeting the Board of Health plans to ask the town for $2000 to sponsor a more comprehensive second Hazardous Waste Clean-up Day scheduled for this Spring. The Board of Health commended John Bettinger for his exceptional work on the first Hazardous Waste Clean-up Day.

Reprint of genealogies

The scarce 1909 "Genealogies of the Families of Cohasset" by George and Elizabeth Davenport has been reprinted, and is available for purchase at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library in Cohasset.

The book has been reprinted by New England History Press, of Somersworth, New Hampshire. The new printing includes a new forword by David Wadsworth, Senior Curator of the Cohasset Historical Society. The new printing includes 50 illustrations from the original edition, plus two rare maps made available by Mr. Wadsworth.

The "Genealogies" is an important supplement to Hingham and Cohasset history. In addition to nearly 500 pages of family records tracing family lines to the earliest New England settlers, the book includes 250 pages of historical articles which were not included in Bigelow's "Narrative History of Cohasset," published in 1898.

The "Genealogies" has long been unavailable except for an occasional copy in the rare book market.

Candidates corner

Golden meetings

Bill Golden, candidate for State Senate, will be holding coffees in Marshfield in the next several weeks preceding the general election.

The first two planned will be at the homes of Garry and Julie Garretson of Ferry Street, and Jimmy Cantwell of Webster Street.

Recently Golden told gatherings how all levels of government can and should work together to solve Marshfield's problems. He cited the local TCE problem now facing our town. (TCE is a contaminant found in our drinking water pipes.) Golden helped organize a group of local residents to study the problem and with the help of state and local officials sought funding and a solution.

If you are interested in attending a coffee or speaking with Golden on issues concerning you, call Annie Federico at 837-5736.

"Custom Furniture at Factory Prices"

We have been handcrafting traditional and contemporary furniture for over 30 years. Our modern Worcester plant is staffed with a team of skilled craftsmen and women, who manufacture some of the finest furniture in the United States.

Visit our factory outlets. Our sales consultants are available to assist you in selecting a style and choosing a fabric.

We guarantee our frames and springing for as long as you own our furniture. We use only 5/4" solid kiln-dried maple for frame construction. Each piece is individually selected before being cut. The frames are all joined in the classic way with wooden dowels and corner blocks for reinforcement (no nails or screws to loosen in time). Our more traditional pieces are hand carved with beautiful detail.

After our furniture is constructed, we pad the entire piece inside and out with cotton, for more comfort, longer life and a more refined look.

For seat cushions you can choose the highest quality foam cores (from soft to very firm) or down.

When the fabric is upholstered across the frame, fine attention is paid to each detail from matching patterns to perfect fit. All skirts are fully lined. Each item of furniture is set up on an inspection table and examined carefully before it is shipped.

We handcraft loveseats, sofas, chairs, ottomans, sectionals and sleepers. You can select any style in any fabric, "truly custom furniture but at factory prices."

Registration office hours

There will be special voter registration hours for the November 6 election.

Residents may register to vote at the Town Clerk's office Sept. 29 from noon to 8 p.m. and Oct. 9 from 9 a.m. to 10 p.m. That date will be the last day residents may register to vote in the national election.

Anyone who would like to obtain an absentee ballot for the November election, may fill an application at the Town Clerk's office. Anyone requesting information about voter registration or absentee ballots, may contact the Town Clerk's office weekday at 383-0187.

Late tax bills

According to Assessor Warren Pratt, property tax bills will not be mailed before October 15. A backlog of computer entries for new construction has delayed the mailing, he explained.

Pratt said to selectmen last week that the Board of Assessors will be meeting this Friday to discuss the exact date when tax bills can be mailed. He explained that chairman Brian Wilkin is more familiar with the computer system but was unable to attend the selectmen's meeting last week because he was on vacation.

He also noted that more technical work had to be completed before the tax bills were finalized.

Flint retirement

Treasurer-Collector Gordon Flint will be wrapping up 33 years of duty Oct. 1. One of Cohasset's senior town officials, he will be missed by co-workers and townspeople alike.

At the school committee meeting this week, Supt. Eugene Crowell praised Flint's assistance throughout his tenure, saying his help in setting up the school roof financing package was invaluable.

Selectmen are expected to appoint his assistant, Elizabeth Ripley, as Acting Treasurer for the interim period before the April election.

During his previous 11 elections for the position, Flint was never opposed.

According to many of his co-workers in Town Hall, the familiar face of Gordon Flint will be missed. He leaves his town office duties for rest, relaxation and some travel with his family.

☐ Joe Becker's feet haven't hit the ground since Sept. 7, which was his birthday . . . on that day he was presented with his grandson, Nathan Allen Durant. Can you imagine a grander birthday present? Nathan's paternal grandparents are Cohassetites also, Mr. and Mrs. Kingsley Durant of Fairoaks Lane. Congratulations to all.

☐Lauraine Campbell Hoy has joined Hunneman/Better Homes and Gardens in their Cohasset office as a Sales Associate.

She attended the Company's orientation and training program designed to familiarize new associates with the organizational structure of the firm and to explain how Hunneman and Company, Inc., serves its clients in the marketing of homes in Eastern Massachusetts.

Lauraine and her husband Jim and family reside at 17 Border St. in Cohasset.

☐ Speaking of congratulations, we understand that the Drama Club certainly earned their share this past weekend, with their production of Voices. The combination of great casting, super acting and superior dancing made it a performance that should be repeated . . . . very entertaining, and a great opening production for the fall, as one "reviewer" stated. For those that missed it, be sure to watch, maybe there will be a command performance. It would be well attended, that's for sure.

☐ Received a note from Larry Fone last week, concerning Cohasset Arts Lottery Council. There is about $1600 available to Artists and art oriented organizations whose efforts will benefit the community. Individual artists and craftspeople are encouraged to submit applications by Oct. 15 (applications are available at the Town Hall or by calling Larry at 383-0898). Our Lottery committee consists of Linda Stearns Hausran, Helen Ketchum, Sigrid Carey, Thomas Lucas, and Larry Fone. They are planning to meet Oct. 16 to review applications and vote on those considered in the best interest of Cohasset. The Mass Arts Lottery Council then sends approval and funds are made available to the town treasurer. Payment is then made on documentation of dollars spent. Sounds like a wonderful idea, especially for you individual artists, if there are any more questions, give Larry a call.

☐ Teddy Cox spent a happy day last Sunday . . . . it seems that it only took him three months, but he finally caught his elusive blue! Teddy reeled it in off Minot, and the fish comes complete with a witness (Bob Pattison) and pictures, lest anyone not believe this fishermans story!

Warren Noble chaired a session on operating mini-labs, having one of the only mini-labs operating in the area in his Hingham store, and Brian Noble chaired a session on corporate financing. Warren Noble has also been named Chairman of the Photo Marketing Association International's Certified Photo Counselor Program.

The Photo Marketing Association International Regional Trade Show was held Sept. 9, 10 and 11 at the Marriott Hotel in Copley Place, Boston.

☐ There's a new resident in The Cory household. Matthew McBrien was born Sept. 10 at Winchester Hospital. Matthew's proud parents are Mr. and Mrs. Martin Corry Jr. of 81 Pleasant St. Grandparents include Mr. and Mrs. Martin of Baltimore, Md. and Mr. and Mrs. William F. Malloy of Cohasset.

☐ Congratulations to Richard and Julie Morse of Scituate on the birth of their first child, Nicholas Anthony.

Nicholas made his debut at 7:06 a.m. at St. Elizabeth's Hospital, weighing in at 7 pounds, 6½ ounces.

His ears, his father claims, are his mother's, and his hands, his mother claims, are his father's.

Grandparents are Mr. and Mrs. Richard Morse of Cohasset, and Mr. and Mrs. Gerard Coletta of Arlington.

Best wishes to all.

☐ Everyone agrees that it was a lot of fun to watch a Cohasset resident on the television, especially making money in the attempt. Mrs. Litchfield had everyone cheering for her, it was great!

☐ The Gridiron Club certainly had a super day for their clinic, which was held last Saturday. Several potential football stars attended, and learned a bit about CHS's football practices, plays etc. An off-shoot of this clinic will be a tag football group formed. There will be games, players will learn the rules, and everyone should have a lot of fun . . . more details as they come in, so watch for them.

☐ The First Cabbage Patch birthday party was held by Mary Brennock this weekend. Mary was the "the hostess" for baby Georgie Laura Rhodes, who entertained 30 other "babies". Mary baked and decorated a Cabbage Patch Cake, which was served after the parade of dolls and lollipop hunt. There were also awards that were presented: the doll that came the furthest; the oldest doll; the youngest doll; the doll with the most brothers and sisters; and, the doll that travelled the most. Izzie Salvador and Jean Salvador were the only two that couldn't make it, but they left their dolls off the night before so that they wouldn't miss the birthday party. Everyone enjoyed the party and cannot wait for Georgie's birthday next year.

☐ If any former Cub Scout or Boy Scout has a uniform that can be used by another, it would be greatly appreciated. Please call either Jane Long (383-1281) or Nancy McLaughlin (383-0167).

☐ This Saturday is the Cohasset Historical fall flea market and yard sale, to be held at the Lothrop House. It will be from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m., with many unique items up for sale. Be sure to get there early so that the best selections may be yours. If you have anything to donate to the sale, give the Society a call at 383-0773 or 383-6930. They will take anything that is in good shape, so it is a perfect time to clean the attic, then donate. Finally, attend the flea market! Everyone will be happy.

☐ Keep the news coming.

Community Center fall schedule

The end of Sept. signals a return to bustling activity for the Cohasset Community Center. The rooms will once again be filled with a variety of courses for members of all ages. Twelve week courses begin the week of Sept. 24, as well as several workshops and mini-courses. Register now at the Center, or call 383-0088 weekday mornings for information. Programs are available at the Center.

Youth courses include Bowling, for children K-three, Tuesday or Thursday afternoons, taught by Bill O'Connell. Karate another long-standing favorite, with Bob Blaisdell and his staff, is offered Wednesday afternoons for children five to 12, grouped appropriately.

Gymnastics, for boys and girls ages three through high school, is taught by Ruthann Sargent weekday afternoons and on Saturdays. Very small classes provide individualized instruction for all ages right up to team level. Call the Center or consult your program for specific days and times for age and skill level. The youngest gymnasts can choose from several different courses. Tumble Tots will also be offered. Gym Tot Fitness, and Mom and Me (a joint venture between parent and child), along with action set to music in Creative Movement, all aim to increase your child's strength, coordination, balance, flexibility and natural rhythm.

Horse-Back Riding, a five-week course teaching basic horsemanship skills and riding development, is offered at Turkey Hill in Hingham. Classes are held for grades K—three Wednesday afternoons, grades four-seven Thursday afternoons, and for adults Thursday mornings.

A unique opportunity for very young children to begin language instruction can be found in Buenos Dias, Tuesday afternoons. Spanish language and culture will be taught by Ron Reilly to grades one-three from 4-5 p.m. and grades four-six from 5-6 p.m. Creative Writing with Deborah Zild jian aims to encourage imaginative expression and the enjoyment of creativity. Plan to attend Wednesdays 3-4 p.m. High school students annually find the SAT Preparation course to be an invaluable review before the big test. Small classes (max. 10 students) and individualized coaching make this five week session successful. Gino DiGirolamo reviews Math Tuesday evenings, and Ron Emmons reviews English Thursday evenings. The course begins Sept. 25 and 27 to be completed just in time for the SAT exam this fall.

Two exciting children's workshops are offered in Oct. Pat Boylan conducts a four week Puppet Making Workshop. Children will make rod puppets and marionettes, with the emphasis on performance. Marilyn Adams will teach a three session workshop on making Pinatas. These short courses fill up fast, so call the Center this week for registration and details.

Adults and teens have many additional courses to choose from. Dennis Walsh will teach a Computer Course for the Novice Thursday evenings, using the computers at the high school. Paul Aronson teaches Tropical Fish as a Hobby on Tuesday evenings, covering all aspects of aquarium planning and ecology and tropical fish breeding and behaviour. Mary Struzziero is returning by popular demand to teach her Quilting course Wednesday mornings. A sampler quilt will be completed during this 10-week course. Editorial

We confess

We goofed.

Last week, Cohasset High School English teacher and dramatist extraordinair, Ron Emmons, sent us a crisp, neatly-written press release about his upcoming production, "Voices."

The play, presented by the Drama Workshop, a group of talented students he had worked with throughout the summer, was taking place on two nights last weekend.

Well, during the mad rush of things that happen at the Mariner during production of the paper on Wednesday, we forgot the release. That meant, we would go without ever mentioning that this worthy production was about to take place. If it didn't get in that week, it would be too late to ever say anything about it at all.

That's the type of thing that really dampens the spirit of a community editor. We certainly try to get everything into the paper, but there are time and space restrictions and sometimes there are mistakes. Last week was a mistake. A big one. Because if there is someone we don't want to overlook it is Ron Emmons and his workshop. These kids deserve better than our oversights.

We were taken to task by a couple of school committee members who saw the play and gave the productions rave reviews, despite "the total lack of publicity."

The play was well-attended, and it was actually a money-maker for the school (our guilt is eased somewhat). But these committee members wondered why the production received no publicity.

What can we say? We goofed. To Ron Emmons and his merry band of thesbians, we are truly repentent. Who would ever want to slight the man Jack Langmaid has referred to as the "Elia Kazan of Cohasset"?

But just to make the situation perfectly clear, the release was not sent to the Mariner until the Monday before our Wednesday production day. We never received any previous notification, and until that time, were completely unaware of the presentation.

By submitting just that one release on the same week the play was to be presented, leaves too much room for mishaps to occurr. It would have been better for everyone if the newspaper received notice of the play far in advance. We could have published a couple of notices, rather than omitting the single press release.

We realize Ron Emmons has far more important assignments than ensuring that all media be made aware of his productions. But perhaps someone else could be assigned the task. It would make things easier for him and for us.

Again, we apologize. And best of luck in all future productions by Cohasset High School.

Happy retirement

Some sacrifices aren't worth it

By Claire McDonough

"I've found the perfect job," I told the Dragon, "and I can't wait to apply for it."

"I have a feeling I'm being set up," he said, "but go ahead. What job?"

"No," I insisted, "I'm serious. I just read about a research scientist at M.I.T. She's looking for compulsive carbohydrate eaters to live in her laboratory and eat. She supplies three meals a day and whenever you have the urge for a snack, you go to a vending machine where you have a choice of things like peanut butter sandwiches, Snickers Bars, and pecan sandies.

"She actually pays you to do this."

"She pays you to eat junk food?"

"Waddya mean, junk food?" I demanded. "I mean, we're talking Massachusetts Institute of Technology."

"I thought you wanted to lose weight," the Dragon objected. "Didn't you say you were going on a diet?"

"Of course I want to go on a diet," I told him virtuously. "It's just that some people are willing to make sacrifices for science."

"Science schmience," he retorted. "What's the purpose of all this? Is humanity going to be any better off because you sit around "o.d.ing" on Snickers Bars?"

"It's more apt to be pecan sandies," I told him. "And anyway, there doesn't have to be a purpose. It's research."

The Dragon sighed. "I can't believe I'm talking to the same woman who called me a glutton because I ate the last of the pork fried rice."

"That's because it was the last," I told him. "You had no consideration for any member of your family who might have wanted some."

"You're just bitter," he told me, "because I got there ahead of you. At least I left some Chinese food which is more than you would have done."

"If you call sweet and sour pork with all the pork eaten Chinese food," I agreed, "then you left some."

The Dragon picked up the newspaper and started to read. A few minutes later he smiled at me.

"I think this may be the perfect job for you after all," he said.

"According to this article, a record of everything you eat will be fed into a computer. They keep track of every single morsel you swallow. The object is to learn how often and at what times compulsive eaters compulse. Then, when they've learned all they can from your biological system and it's time to terminate your employment, guess what they give you?"

"A gold watch?" I asked hopefully.

"Nope. A computerized diet geared to your own personal metabolism and eating habits. When are you going to apply?"

"I've decided to reconsider my decision," I told him. "After all, there are some sacrifices that not even I will make for science."

Appreciation expressed

To the Editor:

I would like to formally acknowledge the receipt of two Zildjian cymbals from the George H. Mealey Post of the American Legion. The quality of these instruments is beyond the scope of our conventional budget, and, as such, the generosity exhibited by the American Legion is greatly appreciated. I can assure everyone that this gift will do much to enhance the performance of our marching band.

On sites fundable

To the Editor:

A recent letter to the Editor questioned the fundability of on-site septic systems under the EPA construction grants program and the on-property portion of alternative wastewater collection systems.

For your readers information, according to an EPA progress report, 52 on-site system projects have been funded nationally. An alternative wastewater management project for Woodstock, NY, which includes the repair of approximately 200 individual on-site septic systemsand423 structures connected to a septic tank/effluent collection system, was funded in 1980 through the EPA construction grants program. Parts of this system have been in operation for over 12 months. Lombardo & Associates are the Engineers for the Woodstock, NY wastewater management project.

Anyone interested in inspecting the facilities is welcome to do so by contacting the Woodstock Town Supervisor, John LaValle at 914-679-8597, Construction Inspection Manager, George Frigon of Lombardo & Associates at 914-679-2024 or myself in Boston at 6[illegible]-367-2332.

Grist mill an important part of town history

In earliest Colonial days one of the most important industries, therefore one of the first to be established, was the building of grist mills for the grinding of farmers' grain.

Corn was an indispensible part of the colonists' agricultural produce. In the year 1678 Cohasset still was a large and sparsely populated section of the town of Hingham. The first farms and homesteads had just begun to appear in the "Conahasset" area following the dividing up of the Conahasset uplands in 1670.

Hingham settlers, owners of the newly granted lands, soon needed a grist mill to serve the growing population. Most early mills were water powered, often with small streams or brooks driving their mill wheels, and a location was soon found for a new mill at Conahasset. Today, the location of that 1678 grist mill is called West Corner, at the junction of Hull Street and Jerusalem Road.

Its site was partly in Hingham and partly in the adjacent town of Hull, and the brook destined to provide the mill's power was the small stream serving as an outlet at the westernmost end of Strait's Pond. At a Town Meeting held in Hingham on March 17, 1678/79 a delegation from the town of Hull was received to discuss the construction of a new mill as a joint venture of Hingham and Hull residents.

At the meeting, Hingham voters declared their approval of the idea and established a set of requirements that must be met by whoever undertook the task of building and maintaining the new millsite. For instance, the owners must "forever maintain a sufficient Grist Mill and Miller to grind the corn of both towns," and the miller could be replaced and a better one found should the requirements not be met.

Appropriate Commonwealth and local taxes would have to be paid by the mill, and a mill dam and bridge across the brook must be maintained by the millers. October 27, 1679 Hingham residents Edmond Hobert, Thomas Lincoln, Joshua Beal and Joseph Bates were chosen as a committee to view and "set out" a parcel of land for the new mill and the miller's house. They chose about one-half acre at the western end of Strait's Pond, adjacent to the bridge on the road leading to Hull, not far from today's North Cohasset Fire Station.

Mill at Cohasset Harbor

The mill soon was completed and operating, run by several members of the Cushing family. Its operation must have been successful for many years but in 1740 Hingham voters found it necessary to pick a committee to investigate the conduct of the Owners and Millers of Strait's Pond. Capt. Stephen Cushing, Capt. John Jacob and Ebenezer Beal comprised the committee who were to see whether or not the conditions specified in the original agreement were complied with, and to report back to the town. They found the mill was in disrepair and not operating as it should.

The owners promised to make the necessary repairs, but in 1745 another problem surfaced at the mill, when townspeople found the bridge over the brook had not been maintained and required replacing. The bridge was the responsibility of the mill operators but more neglect had rendered it unsafe. The voters of both towns, Hingham and Hull, found it necessary to step in and replace the bridge themselves, sharing the cost, then to "settle the affair with the owners of the mill in respect to the deficiencies and neglects in not keeping a good bridge."

Then the whole matter arose again on March 7, 1747/48 when a second committee had to be formed to look into matters concerning the circumstances at the Strait's Pond Mill. By 1754 matters at the mill had grown worse, and in May of that year it was noted that, "for many years past the owners of the mill at Strait's Pond, not having maintained a mill there agreeable to the conditions on which the stream was granted have forfeited all their rights". A committee was formed of Hingham and Hull residents to "transact that affair as they shall think proper for the best interests of the Town."

Apparently the problems between the mill operators and the two towns were settled once again, for there is indication that the old mill building stood until about 1800 when it was destroyed by fire. One of the buildings is reported to have been moved to Jerusalem Road where it became part of a residential home.

Despite its troubles, the early grist mill at Strait's Pond played a significant role in the lives of Cohasset's earliest residents and served its community for more than a century.

Emergency medical group has first meeting

According to statistics, the chances of surviving a cardiac arrest in a community 20 minutes from a hospital is virtually nil.

Therefore, according to the chairman of the Emergency Medical Services Advisory Committee, a Cohasset resident has less than a ten percent chance of surviving cardiac arrest.

The newly-formed advisory committee met this week to discuss ways in which emergency medical services can be improved in Cohasset. But the four-member committee decided that before any concrete proposals are put forth, more direction and guidance must be forthcoming from selectmen.

Dr. Mark Friedman was elected chairman of the advisory group. As he noted during their introductory session , it is his intention to upgrade the Cohasset ambulance service from its present status as "an adequate transportation system, to an advanced emergency life support service." Dr. Friedman added that if there was opposition to that goal, "I frankly want to resign from this committee."

The group was formed last month by selectmen, following a recommendation made earlier this year by the Ambulance Study Committee. Three physicians and a nurse are included in this committee which will advise selectmen on the status of the ambulance service and make suggestions on methods to improve it.

The emergency medical advisory committee has been the target of intense opposition by the Cohasset Emergency Medical Technicians (EMT's), who say their service has never been criticized, and the need for citizen supervision is unnecessarily demoralizing to the department.

The new committee members said they need to know how selectmen would like the department upgraded, and what costs the town is willing to bear to improve the present system. The cost for training EMT's to a higher level of care is exorbitant, they said, and they have been told before that the town does not want to spend excessive funds towards the present system.

As a basis of what the committee will attempt to accomplish in the next few months, members said they will need a copy of the Cohasset EMT's procedure and policy manual. They would also like to review the department's incident report form.

Dr. Friedman attended the meeting armed with several statistical studies regarding ambulance service. And although it is not allowed in Massachusetts, he said his immediate recommendation would have been to allow Cohasset EMT's to use a blind defribillator on cardiac arrest patients. Although there was discussion about the merits and legal ramifications of such action, Dr. Friedman remarked, "at least we'd be headed in the right direction" (toward more intensive life support services).

Among the suggestions he forwarded during this week's meeting, was that the committee discuss the possibility of beginning an advanced cardiac life support weigh station along the route to South Shore Hospital from this community. Although he said it was simply "hearsay" at this point, there is talk that a new emergency medical clinic may be located along Route 3A. If that occurs, a weigh station would allow the ambulance to transport a cardiac patient there, have the patient stabilized, and bring the patient to the hospital after stabilization.

The members agreed that until they know specifically what selectmen want from the commmittee, they "are working in the dark." What they are requesting before their Oct. 23 meeting, is a clarification of their charge and what, if any, actions have been taken on the previous ambulance committee's recommendations.

The group also requested a list of the EMT's official training and whether the department has an official EMT instructor, or if he is simply designated as such.

Member Dr. Wayne DeWald stated that the root of any problems within the department would be the quality of the EMT training. He suggested that perhaps an outside inspector, expert in the field of emergency medical services, examine the Cohasset department and make a determination of its quality. "This inspector would give us an idea of the skills these men have and what they are doing with them. It would take a very qualified person to undertake this," Dr. DeWald added.

Dr. Friedman suggested the committee look into innovative programs in an attempt to upgrade the medical service provided here. "We could start by getting four or five guys up to EMT level so they could at least start IV's." He added this measure would not necessarily save any lives, "but it would increase the training quality and point us in the right direction."

The committee will hopefully have the selectmen's response to their requests by the time it meets in October. At that meeting, Dr. Friedman said he will review some of his proposals for the EMT service.

Health care tour October 3

South Shore residents will have an opportunity to visit some of Boston's major wholistic facilities Oct. 3.

Two public education groups are coordinating their efforts to enlighten Massachusetts residents about the available alternatives in health care and education. Cancer Control Society and National Health Federation's Boston chapters have a full day's program planned for the participants.

The Health on Wheels bus will leave Kingsbury Square, Kingston at 8 a.m. One additional stop will pick up passengers in North River Plaza, Pembroke at 9:45 a.m., and continue on to the first facility "Aqua Retreat Center" for a first hand look at the controversial art of colonic irrigations. A brief lecture will be presented followed by a tour of the center. The second stop will be at the "East/West Foundation", a macrobiotic teaching facility. A lecture and tour of the facility will be followed by a delicious macrobiotic meal. Many persons claim to owe their return to health on this diet.

Last stop for the day will be at the Hippocrates Health Institute, where participants will be shown the living food program, another natural approach to bringing the body into balance. Many also claim a return to good health via this modality. A tour, movie and lecture will be followed by a "live food meal" which is featured daily at the institute.

The Health on Wheels bus will then return to the South Shore with its occupants. Doctors and nurses interested in adding a wholistic side to their training are invited to attend. Seating is limited on a first come, first serve basis. Tickets for the all day tour are $55.

Information and reservations may be secured by calling Jacqueline Helvitz at 747-4246.

PSO school news

Thomas Lucas of the Cohasset High Art Dept. spent part of his summer traveling throughout Greece and the Greek Islands. While on Mykonas he "bumped" into a number of Cohassetites (of all places!), Keri Salvador, Bill Marsden, Scott Barcomb (all CHS graduates) and John Hayes Jr. He was also fortunate to see a great many of the antiquities of Greece in such varied places as Athens (Acropolis), Delphi, Sounion, Delos, Naxos, Santorini, Knossos and much of Crete. All of these famous sites were photographed by Mr. Lucas and he is planning to show them to his art and photo classes. These slides are also available to be shown in other classes.

Volunteers needed

Each week hundreds of Cohassetites volunteer thousands of hours in unpaid jobs. The warm smiles at the Bloodmobile canteen or behind the library circulation desk belong to volunteers. They drive the Senior Citizen van, lead scout troops, coach soccer teams, serve in town government, teach Sunday School, and beautify the town's gardens. And one of the most needed and appreciated, as well as rewarding, jobs can be done by anyone, with a special talent or not, with a few hours or a free day, in our public schools.

The Parent School Organization (PSO) is again searching for individuals to fill the following needs:

Osgood School—Special Needs class would like someone to accompany them on horseback riding, skating, and swimming trips, every Monday from 10 a.m. to noon.

Also needed are Room Mothers/Fathers and classroom helpers for special projects, one-to-one instruction, and small group activities.

Deer Hill School—All teachers have requested assistance with the Individualized Math System (IMS) lab for checking and correcting. The library needs volunteers to help with filing and circulation.

High School—Elizabeth Glasfeld, the school librarian, needs volunteers Monday through Thursday, 8 a.m. to 2 p.m. for special projects.

Jan Wool, Department of Information Systems, is looking for people from local businesses to speak to business students.

Please call Jill or Roger Crafts at 383-6832 if you are interested in becoming a school volunteer.

There is also a need for METCO host families for new and returning students this year. More information is available from Denis or JoAnne Rossi at 383-6818.

School cable use

The Superintendent of Cohasset Schools described it as a proud moment. And school committee members watched with awe their introduction to cable television within the schools.

It wasn't their images that reflected approval of the new high school cable studio, although they did gain a glimpse of what televised meetings will resemble.

But through the explanation of Audio Visual Coordinator John Packard, they learned how cable television will play a part in the present and future education of our children.

What was formerly Room 106 on the first floor of the high school, has been converted to an ample television studio, editing, radio room and office and storage area. The work was completed by Maintenance Director John Jacobucci. The only items which cost the town anything was $1600 for soundproof carpeting and $1900 for curtains and rigging that allow the drapes to completely encircle the studio room.

Dr. Packard said he envisions the room being utilized by students and faculty every class period, with commun-

CHS sports report for the week . . .

By Lisa Shumaker

Cross Country

Monday, Cohasset faced both Whitman/Hanson and East Bridgewater. Despite losing both meets, Cohasset's T. Nito ran quite well and placed fifth against East Bridgewater.

"This is a building year for our team," according to the team's coach, Paul Narkiewicz, who is also very impressed with two seventh grade boys, Jimmy Long and Ned Thomson, both of whom will definitely be future stars for Cohasset. The team has three outstanding girls on it as well, Terry Lloyd, Saadia Bryant, and Stephanie Endris. Narkiewicz urges any girls, grades 7 through 12, to come out for the team.

Girls' Varsity Soccer

Cohasset had an outstanding week, tying a tough Duxbury team 0 to 0, and destroying Hanover 4 to 1. The girls looked very strong in both games and worked well together.

Against Duxbury, Cohasset outplayed their opposition from beginning to end. In fact, Cohasset outshot Duxbury by a margin of 15 to 12. Sarah Seavey, Carla Lucas, Amy Duncombe, and Joanie Chisom all played excellently and made major contributions for Cohasset.

Thursday, Cohasset overpowered Hanover and won their first game. Amy Duncombe, Janet DiGorolamo, Tara Stanford, and Sarah Seavey were all scorers for Cohasset. Carla Lucas had another great performance, and both Krissy Pompeo and Amy Donovan turned in good efforts for Cohasset.

Cohasset plays at Norwell on Monday and comes back home on Wednesday to try and beat an aggressive Rockland team. Thursday, the girls will travel to Whitman/Hanson High School.

Varsity Girls' Field Hockey

Cohasset started off the week slowly Tuesday, losing to East Bridgewater 3 to 0. However, the girls picked up the pace and breezed past Scituate on Thursday, 2 to 0.

Tuesday, Cohasset fell apart and allowed East Bridgewater to score three times. The girls had a tough time generating any offense, and Cohasset's defense had an off day as well.

However, Cohasset bounced back and knocked off Scituate. Both Vicki Spooner and Cindy Spooner picked up goals. Halfbacks, Lee Sullivan and Maria Cahill proved to be the backbone of Cohasset's offense, and both played excellently. Maureen Farren had a great game for Cohasset as well.

Cohasset plays Hull Monday and plans to beat Sandwich on Wednesday in Cohasset.

Boys' Varsity Soccer

The boys had an outstanding week winning both of their games. Against Chatham, Cohasset won 2 to 0. In Abington on Saturday, Cohasset clobbered Abington 6 to 0.

Against Chatham, Michael DeSantis scored both goals assisted by John Reidy and David MacDonald. Both Kevin Leary and Kevin Dunn had excellent games for Cohasset.

In the first half, Cohasset came out slowly. However, Cohasset controlled the entire second half, scoring both of their goals and allowing only one shot on net.

Saturday, Cohasset crushed a weak Abington team. In the first half, Mason Sandell scored on a direct kick, and Michael DeSantis also scored, assisted by John Reidy. In the second half, Cohasset heated up and scored four goals, two of which were scored by Bobby Schultz, the other two by David MacDonald. Michael DeSantis assisted on two of these goals. Chris Kirkendall and Bobby Shultz each picked up an assist as well.

John Reidy had an impressive game for Cohasset, and Greg Igo played fantastic defense. Goalie, Billy McKenna, picked up his fourth straight shutout of the season. Cohasset remains undefeated with a record of 4 to 0!

Tuesday, Cohasset takes on Norwell away, and Thursday, Sandwich will come to Cohasset. Both teams are pretty good and should be a bit of a challenge for Cohasset.

Varsity Football

The football team was idle this week, but they have their first home game this Saturday, as they take on Umana High School.

School budget overruns

There was some good and some bad budgetary news for the school committee this week.

The good news is that the school roof project is proceeding well and looks like it will be in under budget. The bad news is that currently there is about $50,000 in unappropriated budget items that have been expended this year.

This was the fiscal portrait painted by Supt. Eugene Crowell to the school committee Monday night. Among the items which have been squeezed into the 1985 fiscal budget, are $41,874 in unappropriated teacher salaries approved earlier this year by the school committee. Those salaries include $17,010 for a half-time Kindergarten teacher, $10,646 for a half-time fifth grade instructor, money for replacement of a guidance counselor, a new library staff position at Deer Hill, and a sum to compensate all teachers who have advanced in academic degrees.

That budget inflater is offset, Crowell explained, by $19,382 which was saved when less experienced teachers were hired to replace senior teachers who left the system. As the superintendent told the school committee members,"these are all appropriations that can be brought before any town group with your head held high."

Other unexpected budget items this year have included $3100 for a new clock and bell system at Deer Hill School, $6000 for blackboard replacement in the most needed areas in the high school, $1456 for two new coaches, and $20,000 anticipated for long term staff absences.

"What are we facing this year?" Crowell asked the members. "We can do what we have done for the last three years, doing more with less, but the integrity of the school system is getting tired of that. I am stretching your tax dollars . . . but if we don't come up with $50,000 we will have some choices to make this year."

School committee chairman Joseph Nedrow informed the members earlier that he was requesting a meeting as soon as possible with the advisory committee toreview the school system's financial status.

The good news, according to Supt. Crowell, is that the Deer Hill School roof project has been awarded for a total price of $128,000. The bids for the high school project were scheduled to be opened Wednesday morning. It is likely the entire project will be less than the $551,000 appropriated for the roofing at town meeting.

The other portion of the good news department is that the town's application for fifty percent state reimbursement for the roof repairs looks good, according to the superintendent. Cohasset was one of the first three municipalities to complete the application documents and submit it, an optimistic Crowell stated, and the chances "appear likely" that the town will receive the state funding.

If that is the case, in a ten-year period, through the life of the project's bond, the town could get back $400,000 of the $55l,000 it appropriated at the town meeting, he added.

The town should learn its fate from the state within Litter disposal

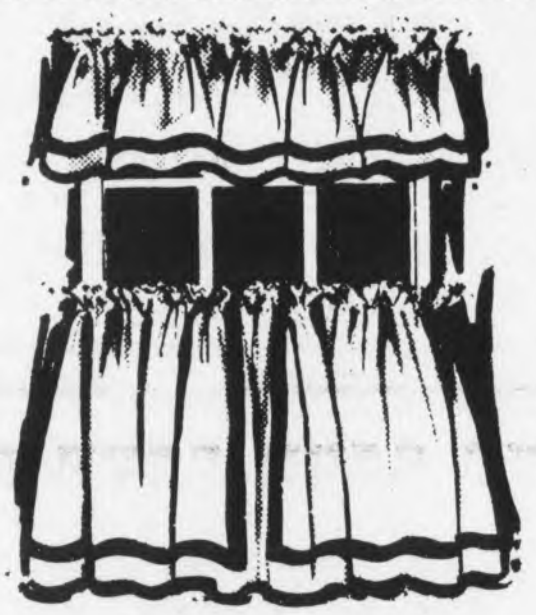
Referring to the Commonwealth-wide litter plague as having reached "alarming proportions" Governor Dukakis' Chief Legal Counsel S. Stephen Rosenfeld has called upon all state District Attorneys to pursue convictions in cases involving illegal rubbish disposal.

Rosenfeld's request comes in the wake of a recent announcement by state Department of Public Works Commissioner Robert T. Tierney that the DPW has organized a massive cleanup campaign along state highways.



FREE FLIGHT

Caribbean cruises leaving from ports in Florida or San Juan often offer free flights to the port of embarkation. The cost is actually buried in the price of the cruise. However, the low fares that cruise companies are able to negotiate often make the flight cheaper than you could buy for yourself. If you live far from the port, the best deal is a cruise with "free" flights from anywhere in the United States. There may be a surcharge if you are coming from the Midwest or West. If you live near the port city, ask the travel agent about possible discounts for those who arrive at the port on their own.

There are many intriguing and fascinating vacation spots around the globe. When you visit COLPITTS TRAVEL CENTER a representative from our staff will be delighted to discuss and assist you with the planning of your next vacation. Fall College Vacancies

Senator Edward P. Kirby (R-Whitman) wants to inform prospective college students that fall term vacancies have been announced in a report released by The New England Board of Higher Education.

Combined totals for 216 colleges and universities show more than 12,600 vacancies for freshman and more than 7,100 vacancies for transfer students.

The institutions polled are located in Massachusetts, Connecticut, Maine, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, and Vermont.

The region's two-year colleges accounted for more than 61 percent of the openings for freshman. Public institutions accounted for 63 percent of all vacancies.

Copies of the survey have been made available to high schools, according to an NEBHE representative. Copies may also be obtained from Sen. Kirby, Room 520, State House, Boston, 02133.

Kay Meacham, Nina Clinton and Vivian Mulligan are getting together for a "Commuters Luncheon" at the New Orleans Restaurant on Boylston Street on October 2. Anyone who would like to join in should call Kay Meacham 383-6693, Nina Clinton 383-1220 or Vivian Mulligan 383-9141.

Congratulations to James Alba and Jennifer Hubbard who were married at the Meeting House on Saturday, September 15.

Circle Dinners

Our first weekend of Circle Dinners will be October 19-20. There is a slight change in the program this year. In order to make the task of our hosts and hostesses easier, persons are being asked to sign up for each series of circle dinners on the basis of a commitment to attend on a pre-announed date. This will avoid a huge number of phone calls tooft-timesnecessary to arrange a date for dinner.

Three weekends have been scheduled for the dinners, October 19-20, January 25-26 and April 26-27. You must sign up for each weekend no later than ten days before the date of the dinner in order to participate indicating whether you are available for Friday or Saturday or both. You may sign up by calling the church office, 383-1100, signing a sheet posted in the Meeting House or by calling Shelly Weier, 383-1590.

Potluck Suppers

Potluck suppers will resume at 6:30 p.m., Wednesday, September 26. Adult education course "Building Your Own Theology" follows at 8 p.m.

Music Notes

Response to the Youth Choir program this year has been underwhelming to say the least! I have made one final appeal for members this week in Family Circle, and if we have fewer than ten children enrolled in the Youth Choir, we will be forced to cancel the program for the year to re-evaluate and try again next year. Rehearsal time is 4 p.m. Wednesday.

Community

The Special Needs teacher at Joseph Osgood School desperately needs a volunteer every Monday from 10 a.m. to noon. Responsibilities include accompanying the youngsters to horseback riding lessons, skating lessons and swimming lessons. You do not have to participate in these activities! Please call Jill Crafts (383-6832) if you are interested.

TIC Tournament set for Oct. 1

The Seventh Annual Talking Information Center (TIC) Golf Tournament is set for Monday, Oct. 1, at the Hatherly Country Club in North Scituate.

Barbara Elliot of Cohasset is the chairman of this year's event, a major fundraiser for the Center. Assistants are John Thayer of Norwell, Joe Goodrow of Scituate, Edward Barrett of Duxbury, Mike and Alice Coscia of Cohasset.

Talking Information Center (TIC) is a Marshfield-based radio reading service which provides the daily broadcasting of newspapers, books, magazines, shopping guides, calendars of local events and educational material to over 2,500 blind and visually impaired persons throughout Massachusetts.

TIC has stations in Boston, North Dartmouth and Worcester in addition to the Marshfield Center. All of the reading is performed by volunteer readers.

Joe Lazaro, seven-time National Blind Golf champion will be among those teeing up to help raise funds for TIC. Lazaro is the only blind golfer ever to shoot in the 70s, and has written a book relating his amazing golf secrets and accomplishments.

Tournament chairman Elliot said she is hoping for a full field for the tournament, and early indications are pointing to that.

Many local businesses have continued in their support of the event by sponsoring holes and providing gifts and foursomes for the event including Sullivan Tire Company of Rockland, Etonic Golf Apparel and Footwear, Lou's 139 Restaurant of Marshfield, Marshfield Liquor Store, The Columbia Chase Corporation, The Boston Globe and Footjoy Company.

As a special treat this year, the Globe is providing special T shirts to each player representing TIC's theme that "there are some things a seeing eye dog just can't do."

As part of the festivities, each golfer receives a steak dinner, cocktail, momentos, T-shirt and a wonderful day of golf topped by an evening of dancing to a fabulous band.

The tournament is coordinated by Woody Kay, host pro, and many area pros participate in the tournament each year including the pros from Marshfield and Scituate Country Clubs.

Anyone interested in playing in the tournament can contact Ron Bersani at the Center, Woody Kay at Hatherly or Barbara Elliot at 383-1154.

Museums to close

The Cohasset Historical Society's two museums at Cohasset Center will close for the winter season Sunday, Sept. 30. Until that date the museum buildings will remain open to the public from 1:30 to 4:30 p.m. each day except Monday.

The Capt. Wilson House is an 1810 home built by housewright David Nichols for one of Cohasset's seafaring families. The house's first owner, Capt. John Wilson, born in 1788, became a Master Mariner and commanded several local vessels during his seafaring career. Among them were the packet "Cohasset" upon which a British Officer left his sword during the War of 1812, later the "Charlotte"; the fishing schooner "Lydia"; the "Almira"; the schooners "Eolus ", "Caroline" and "Bounty".

Capt. Wilson died in 1861. His son Justin Kent Wilson resided in the house during his lifetime, then in 1912 the Wilson family sold the Elm St. property to William H. McGaw, a local businessman. McGaw subsequently presented the old seafarer's home to the Cohasset Historical Society in 1936 and it became the Society's headquarters and the first historical museum in the town.

Today, the Capt. John Wilson house, largely unaltered from its original condition, contains the Historical Society's collections of 18th and 19th century home furnishings, kitchenwares, toys and artwork donated from the old homes of Cohasset.

Next door to the Wilson House, the Society's Maritime Museum is a living reminder of the Town's seafaring past. Dating from the mid or latter 1700's, the museum building originally was Bates' Ship Chandlery and was located on Border Street at the Cove. Today the old chandlery contains a number of collections depicting the town's "Age of Sail" as a fishing village and New England seacost town. Given to the Historical Society in 1957 by Mr. and Mrs. William Cox, the Maritime Museum was moved to its present location at that time.

Featured in its exhibits are relics of numerous local shipwrecks, examples of equipment from Cohasset's 19th century fishing schooners, finely made models of sailing vessels, artwork relating to maritime subjects, and the story of the first and second Minot's Ledge Lighthouse. The museum's second floor contains a general collection of historical artifacts covering nearly three centuries of Cohasset's evolution.

Admission to the Historical Society's two museums at Cohasset Center is $.75 per building for adults, children from six to 12 are admitted at $.25 per building. Prearranged group tours are welcome at a special rate. For information regarding group rates, please call the Society at 383-0773 or 383-6930.

six to eight weeks.

In the meantime, Supt. Crowell has talked with the town accountant who suggested the school committee reserve a space within the Nov. 19 town meeting warrant.

In an explanation presented to the school committee last month, Architect Frank Bagge said because certain newer sections of the high school roof were deteriorating quickly, some sections had to be substituted for other older sections of the roof. These older sections were originally thought to be part of the roofing project.

But through this proposed warrant article, the school committee intends to complete the entire roofing project by including the three substituted areas in an appropriation request. The roofs over the Sullivan gym, the office area and the library will remain undone in this present project. With an additional appropriation, approximately less than one-half the previous roof budget, all roofing problems will be solved for 20 years, Supt. Crowell said.

And if the state funding becomes a reality, this additional portion will be included through addendums to the contract.

If the extra money is appropriated at the special town meeting in November, bids can be awarded and work can begin in the summer without shifting classes to accommodate construction, he added.

If the committee waited until the spring town meeting to request additional monies, the project would not begin until the start of the next school year when classes are in session.

"The bottom line is that if we can try and save the town some money, we should do it," Crowell added.

The committee voted to direct the superintendent to request a space be held within the warrant, while they investigate the feasibility of the additional roofing project.

Once upon a time, not so far away,
a brave Copper King built an enchanted kingdom in a land by the sea.
There in Scituate, he surrounded his mansion with idyllic pastures and formal gardens. Then built a fairy tale tower to watch over his dream.
Some said he was eccentric. Others said he was vain. But in truth, the legendary millionaire, Thomas Lawson, was building a beautiful haven as a gift for his beloved family. And in 1903, Dreamwold came true.

Now it's coming true again.
All the majesty, privacy and splendor that was Dreamwold. In twenty-six unique Victorian condominium residences encircling a spectacular rose garden and beautiful swimming pool.
Dreamwold. A magnificent blend of historic restoration and new construction as only Boston's premier developer, Parencorp, could do.
This summer, Dreamwold is available at pre-marketing prices, starting in the mid-100's. Visit Dreamwold between 11:00 AM and 6:00 PM daily for a personal presentation. Or call 545-0222 or 731-5570 for more information.
It's coming true again. The new Dreamwold. Soon to be a legend of its own.

from the kitchen

By Joan Pinkham

One of summer's last weekend flings saw friends and family gathered at the home of Marge Ross where the spacious lawns ramble on down toward the banks of the North River and as we munched our way through a heavenly assortment of appetizers, the conversation in our little corner by the pool turned to cooking. One particularly inviting dish which was soon devoured was the one shown below and after much prodding from Diana Morris, Joanne Cure promised to share with us this way of making

BROCCOLI DIP

2 pkgs. frozen chopped broccoli, cooked.
1 can cream of mushroom soup
1/3 stick of butter
1 pkg. Rondale herb and garlic cheese
1/3 c. chopped green onion
1 c. Pepperidge Farm stuffing mix.

Cook broccoli—heat soup in its condensed form. Add cheese and butter-stir 'til cheese and butter are melted. Add remaining ingredients including drained broccoli. Turn into open casserole dish. Bake at 350 for 1/2 hour. Serve warm with party rye bread or crax. NOTE: Joanne says recipe came from her friend, Walda Giallongo of Norwell and that this makes a large dish and she usually runs out of the bread or crax on the tray before the dip is gone, so suggests having extras on hand to replenish the tray.

Joanne's idea of a good time on a rainy day is to be alone in her kitchen preparing recipes she has collected over the years. She always has her freezer well stocked with goodies and at large cocktail parties she is free to enjoy them herself, having only to reach into the freezer for hors d/oeuvres she has prepared well in advance. Here is another favorite of hers which she freezes on the cookie sheet on which they were baked and then puts into freezer bags. Joanne reheats them in the micro-wave or regular oven for a few minutes—makes about 50 rounds, if you make them small bite sized. From a column called "Chatters" comes her

SAUSAGE ROUNDS

1 lb. hot Italian sausage
3 c. pkg. biscuit mix
1 lb. grated cheddar cheese
1¼ c. milk
1 tsp. each minced parsley and onion

Remove sausage from link skins and chop. Cook in frying pan 'til done. Add remaining ingredients and mix well. Drop by small spoonfuls onto ungreased cookie sheet. Bake at 400 degrees for 10 min. Serve hot.

In the 16 years Joanne and her husband have made Hanover their home, she has been involved in a number of church and civic projects. One dear to her heart was the Hanover Woman's Club of which she is a charter member. Their cookbook called "Festival of Hors d'oeuvres" was prepared by members as a fundraiser for the annual Hanover Arts Festival which they began. This recipe was given to Joanne by her friend, Angela Rauch of Scituate, and is called simply

CHICKEN BITES

1 1/3 c. Pepperidge Farm Herb stuffing
1/2 c. shredded or grated Parmesan cheese
1/4 tsp. garlic salt
1/2 tsp. salt
1/8 tsp. pepper
1¼ sticks butter or oleo

Four boned and skinned chicken breasts cut in bite-size pieces. Roll stuffing to fine crumbs. Add cheese and dry seasonings. Melt butter, dip in chicken pieces and roll in crumbs to coat all over. Arrange on cookie sheet lined with foil. Bake approx. 10 min. at 350° until brown. Makes about 40 appetizers and can be frozen in containers prior to baking. Joanne says she usuall y doubles the recipe to have on hand, as they are always a big success and easier to eat than chicken wings, etc. Freeze on cookie sheets before storing in container.

An inveterate "snipper" of magazine and paper recipes, this one Joanne got long ago from "Chatters."

SHRIMP DIP

4½ oz. can tiny shrimp, drained
10 3/4 oz. can cream of shrimp soup
8 oz. cream cheese
1/2 tsp. horseradish

Melt cheese in the soup over low heat. Add shrimp and horseradish. Blend. May be served warm or cold with veggies or crax or fritos.

Musings

☐ H.L. Mencken speaking: "An idealist is one who, on noticing that a rose smells better than a cabbage, concludes that it will also make better soup."

☐ Despite her tremendous staying power, she finally had to divorce her husband because of his straying power.

☐ A few more news items:

Horses to run even if they have to walk, Boston Herald.

From coast to coast traveled the Wakefield Daily Item's headline: Women are urged to flatten cans, but then a lulu from the Malden Evening News: Mayor McCarthy sits on throne all morning.

☐ Children have become so expensive, only the poor can afford them.

☐ You know you're in a small town when the high school valedictorian wins a welding scholarship of $35 to a nearby trade school.

☐ Cotton Ed Smith once referred to a set of congressional resolutions as "a document drawn up with fixed determination, constancy of purpose, fiery enthusiasm and righteous indignation; adopted unanimously — and forgotten the next day."

☐ I never knew what Arthur Miller meant when he said, "A good newspaper . . . is a nation talking to itself."

ity groups requesting the facility in the evenings.

The contract between American Cablesystems and Cohasset stipulated that about $17,500 worth of portable studio equipment be given to the school system. The need for a separate studio facility became evident last year as many teachers and students crowded into Packard's former small office, and requested instruction on the use of the equipment.

While lecturing the school committee members on the "do's and don'ts" of appearances and conduct on television, Dr. Packard noted that many students have already learned camera techniques, editing and production from American's Community Coordinator John Ronan.

Student interns Mike Griner, Peter Cook, and Paul Bishop are among the more seasoned apprentices who are currently producing their own show on Channel 3 and helping out with school productions on the educational channel.

Griner explained to the committee that students, such as himself, "now have the opportunity to use equipment no one person could ever afford."

A handbook explains the school cable television policy, and was outlined by Dr. Packard during the meeting. As he noted, nothing will be broadcast over Channel 2 without his review and approval. An educational cable council will have final appeal power over his decision, he added.

Among the future goals for educational cable television which Dr. Packard outlined for the committee are: to involve teachers, students and other educational community members in the use of cable t.v. to meet their instructional learning, communications and career development goals; to promulate school activities of all kinds and increase community participation in and understanding of our programs through cable t.v. and radio; to regularly arrange for communications interns in our schools to help our students and teachers in this process; to start a Cohasset High School radio station; to increase our collection of excellent instructional support materials through off-air recording; to improve the communications skills of all those who participate in the cable t.v. activities; and to take the first step in interactive cable t.v. with the other South Shore towns in our American Cablesystems network.

Chimera added to commuter boat fleet

There's a new commuter boat from Hingham to Boston. Captain Dana Goodell announces the newest addition to Boston Harbor Commuter Services, the "Chimera".

Captain Dana Goodell will lead the "Chimera" and he says the largest, high speed commuter boat occupying the harbor will be expanding the current schedule between the Hingham Shipyard and the Boston Wharf.

He says while thousands of commuters honk their horns and bang fenders on the expresseway, the "Chimera" commuters will be sipping beverages and eating pastries as they cruise through the Boston Harbor.

Over a hundred feet long, with a complete wrap around deck on the rear, front and upstairs, commuters can ease into their day viewing the sights of the harbor.

Other riders can chose to remain on the main deck lounge or in the galley below, where tables are available for the avid workaholics.

In addition, the "Chimera" will act as a vehicle providing information on events occurring in the South Shore and Boston.

Tickets for the "Chimera" and Boston-Hingham commuter boats can be purchased at the Hingham Shipyard. The cost is $2.75 per ride with a ten trip ticket. The commuter fleet makes daily trips to and from Boston starting from 6:10 a.m. to 7:30 p.m., weekdays only.

Here is the Hingham to Boston's latest commuter boat, "Chimera," running daily (Monday through Friday) at $2.75 per ticket.

An unexpected convalescence with FDR

By Lois Martin

It advanced through its supercilious little cough that was a mere prelude to a chafing at the base of the throat. By late Wednesday afternoon, the pronouncement was clear.

A stupid late summer cold and who cares. I didn't. I was prepared to blow my nose on notice and to complain of feeling like a Dristan ad. No more.

But, bless my little heart, within 36 hours, the guerilla germfare had displaced my ability to work.

And so, to bed. But not before elaborate preparations. If I'm gonna be sick, I want to do it in the best of conditions . . . a good book, lots of pop (I don't care if the rest of the world calls it 'soda') and the nose cloths close at hand.

PATCHES

Before abdicating my office, therefore, I went upstairs to David Cutler's office. He and others were in the midst of a robust meeting, the subject matter of which now escapes me. Because I was there on business.

David is an avid reader, no, a voracious one. A history major of Colby Collge which is in Maine, though he summarily dismisses that reality, he can't get enough of hefty non-fiction biographies. He particularly is drawn to those dealing with American leaders.

So shopping in his office's minor library, one has an avenue to reading material that could get her through a bronchial infection as well as a fever.

I chose FDR's Last year, by Jim Bishop. I didn't want to be sick enough to read his whole terms of office, for gosh sakes. And the one year looked big enough for an encampment of several days.

Lilly and I settled down to infirmity in bed with the book.

If Jim Bishop had a fault in his foray through FDR's March of '44 to April of '45, it was his thoroughness. His was to be a record of unredoubtable completeness.

Consequently, I was hard-pressed in my languor to find a pace in the fat book that was equal to my yearning for the good parts.

But within that catalogue I found names I haven't thought of in years. They used to be supper table talk in those years when I was seven years old . . . Cordell Hull, Bernard Baruch, Allen Dulles, the same old Harold Stassen that lives forever, Alben Barkley.

Considering the revelation of the doctor's records of FDR, it is amazing the man undertook and commanded the office in that final election. Hardening of the arteries, they kept saying, but never publicly. They kept blaming everything on Franklin's sinuses and . . . a touch of bronchitis.

By the time I got near the Yalta Conference, friends had brought over serious cough medicine, ice cream and good cheer that was intended to remand me to good health. They accused me of being boring in my infirmity and they made it clear they'd only put up with that so long.

But they probably didn't know about my reading problem. It is this. I never just read a book. I become part of it. FDR wasn't feeling well. Neither was I. He and I spent our days propped in bed, trying to tend to some matters of state (town) as we were able. We took our medicine and we consulted with our physician.

Fala, i.e. Lilly stayed nearby my bed with worried brown eyes, attentive.

So far as I could tell, Eleanor and Franklin shared the political platform of his making, figuratively and literally. That was about it, from what I gathered. They had an ingenuous regard for one another in a most brotherly/ sisterly relationship.

Jim Bishop would be darned if he'd report the existence of Lucy Rutherfurd as lowly gossip. He'd given in to including her, only because she was a part of that year.

By Saturday afternoon Franklin and I were at Warm Springs, Georgia, with his entourage, that included Lucy. He had gained a little weight . . . I had been able to increase my nourishment in response to his need.

He was posing for a portrait in that Navy cape that he was photographed in from one end of the world to the other . . . when he was stricken.

The nation, the world, including Winston Churchill, suffered from a broken heart. Fala went berserk within moments of his death coincidental to Lilly's unprovoked spell of barking.

How I survived I'm not sure. Probably it was through that impervious good cheer friends brought in. What did they, after all, know of my struggle with the United Nations, of those infernal secret messages to Stalin when I was barely up to seeing the Secretary of State.

Thank goodness I'm back to work, feeling better. And as soon as I can bring myself to take off this cape, I'll know I'm back to normal.

Planners review drainage plans planning board members approve the parking lot lighting.

In other business, William Last finally obtained approval from the planning board Wednesday, Sept. 19 to continue building at the Bates Lane development.

Town Engineer John Modzelewski informed the planning board of Last and Engineer Neil Murphy's efforts to solve the drainage porblem. Modzelewski stated that the water flow onto abutters' lots is "certainly less than prior to development."

Modzelewski and Murphy proposed that an existing ditch be dug two feet deeper. Curshed stone and a covering of loam will fill the ditch and will allow water to infiltrate into the ground.

Last will submit copies of the approved drainage plan for the planning board to sign.

Owners of Cohasset Gas and Deisel, Judith and Stephen Ward, and Atty. Charles Humphrey asked the planning board for a special permit to build on Crockers Lane.

The one year building permit granted to the Wards in January of 1983 expired this year because the Wards did not begin construction. Humphrey argued that the reason they were unable to build within the year was because of delays in obtaining construction permits, not because of the lack of their own efforts.

Board members Daniel Cotton and Robert Sturdy expressed their concern that between January and September of 1983 the Wards did not appear to make any efforts to begin building.

Atty. Humphrey argued that September was well within the one year limit for the permit. Construction was delayed, Humphrey said, because the board of health took eight months to approve a chemical toilet for the site.

Town Counsel Atty. Rich Henderson added that to say no efforts were made by the Wards just because they were not before a town board in those eight months, cannot be assumed.

Based on this information, an agreement was signed by the board to pass the Wards' plans onto the building inspector. The plans must include a full screening of the building and the service apron area on the side of Route 3A. The Wards also agreed to construct a bermed, impervious concrete surface, satisfactory to the building inspector, with catch basins to entrap oil, grease, and other hazardous substances.

New Cohasset franchise

Harbor Mechanical Contractors, Inc. of Cohasset has been selected to be a part of a fast growing nationwide total home property services system —Mr. Build International, according to company president William Higgins.

The firm will now be known as Mr. Build Harbor Mechanical Contractors, Inc.

The North Main Street company was founded in 1978 by William Higgins. The new Mr. Build franchise provides plumbing and heating services in the South Shore territory, Higgins said.

"We believe our affiliation with Mr. Build will help us provide the community with a plumbing and heating service of ever greater quality and reliability," Higgins stated. "All Mr. Builds are prescreened both for professional competence and demonstrated on-time performance."

This script could depict 'The Day Before'

By Jane Lane

"This film will hopefully entertain, although that wasn't my goal. It's going to scare the hell out of them, because if something is not done differently . . ."

If the right decisions are not made by the right people, our chances for survival are greatly decreased. But there is that stream of optimism flowing through his conversation, a thread for which our existence may someday be grasping. And MIT professor Lincoln Bloomfield is cautiously optimistic that we are capable of maintaining that balance, of continuing peace rather than concluding with disaster.

This longtime Cohasset resident, who has worked in various capacities for the U.S. State Department and the Carter administrations' National Security Council, is comfortable with his knowledge that a nuclear holocaust is an avoidable consequence. And this government adviser and author has written a scenario which relates the events possibly leading to World War III.

Being an experienced author, Bloomfield has left this ending open to interpretation. The script, used as the basis for a special World Premier Home Box Office (HBO) presentation which will air October 14, 24 and 29, allows the viewer to individually determine whether national decision-makers have brought about our demise, or whether survival will continue another day.

The name of the HBO movie has been dramatically entitled, "A Countdown to Looking Glass," in reference to the airborne Presidential strategic command post.

For viewers who anticipate a repeat performance of the Hollywood version of nuclear destruction, as seen in last year's "The Day After," that disaster will be avoided, Bloomfield promises.

Indeed, he had originally written the script with the less dramatic, but more hopeful title of "The Day

Nursing home could create 165-180 jobs

By Judy Gilman

A proposed $6.8 million nursing home on the Hingham/Cohasset line would provide 164 skilled and intermediate care beds for the area and create between 165 and 180 full and part-time jobs as well.

The Jamaica Plain-based nursing home company filed a determination of need document with the state Department of Public Health in late August. The state usually takes about a year to rule on such certificates, but it recently identified the South Shore area as needing an additional 400 nursing home beds.

The owner of the proposed home, which would sit on the top of Turkey Hill and overlook the ocean, is Waterford Limited Partnership, whose two partners are Gerard and Kathleen Martin of Jamaica Plain. Martin is the principal in several nursing homes on the North Shore, including the Beverly Nursing Home, the Liberty Pavilion in Danvers and The Greenery in Brighton, a specialized facility for head-injury patients.

According to George Ferencik, the project director for the proposed Waterford facility in Cohasset, who is now executive director of The Greenery, the proposed nursing home will offer the most up-to-date medical care in elegant surroundings. "For many of our patients, the most active thing they'll be able to do is look out the window," Ferencik said in an interview Tuesday. "The ocean view, especially from the second floor, will be spectacular."

The largest part of the property the nursing home is eyeing is in Cohasset (5.87 acres there, with 0.79 acres in Hingham) but the access is through Hingham, off the end of Turkey Hill Lane. Hingham resident Joseph Saponaro, who owns most of the land adjacent to the nursing home site, has initiated a 10-taxpayer inquiry for a public hearing on the project, citing traffic problems that would be created and exacerbated in the area.

But Ferencik said he felt sure those questions could be addressed satisfactorily. "There are two times during the day, early morning and middle of the afternoon, that would have the greatest amount of traffic, when the day workers come and leave. But even those are staggered, with, for instance, the kitchen workers arriving at 6 a.m. and nursing and administrative staff between 7 and 9 a.m. And there wouldn't be any ambulances racing up the hill with their sirens blaring. Yes, we have patients delivered by ambulance, but we would instruct all ambulances not to use their sirens in the neighborhood. We're not an emergency care facility."

The proposed facility would have a full complement of sitting rooms, recreation rooms and meeting rooms, the latter of which would be available to community groups to use. "We've found that very successful in our other facilities," Ferencik said. "The patients love having the activity of groups coming in." He also mentioned the possibility of creating an intergen-

Coach sets goals for Cohasset kids

He accepted the position of head coach with the knowledge it may only last for one year. But Phil Pisano has goals for his team which he acknowledges will continue with or without his guidance.

An avid sports fan (what sport depends on the season), Pisano sees athletes and football in particular, with a philosophical viewpoint. The relationships and lessons the athlete gathers through his participation will be instilled for the remainder of his life.

It is that knowledge that Pisano, the Cohasset High School varsity football coach, hopes to impart to his young players.

Aside from the philosophical backbone of his coaching, Pisano likes to win. Actually, he loves to win. Just ask his players after Saturday's victory against Umana.

Days later, Pisano joyously recalls the team's first 1984 win.

"It fulfilled all our goals for the week. We improved our running attack which was our primary concern from the Hanover game," Pisano states from an office within Scituate High school where he has taught business and accounting for the past 19 years. "We also opened up our passing attack. Troy (Chatterton) was five for six in passes and they were all substantial gains. This was the result of our improved running attack."

Not one to linger in the limelight, Coach Pisano was quick to give credit for the win to many of the Cohasset players.

"Co-captains Jay Contis and Jeff Bloom, three sophomores, Liam Stanford, and tackles Jeff Soltesz and Jeff Lydon, all did a much better job. They were the key to our offensive running attack," according to the coach.

The turning point in last week's game, the coach recalls, arrived early in the first quarter. Umana scored a touchdown early in the first minutes of the game with a 35-yard pass. With the ensuing kick-off, Cohasset's Floyd Hartwick returned it for a 94-yard touchdown.

"The kids went crazy after that," Pisano notes. "Once that happened, everything clicked defensively and offensively. The kids were all outstanding throughout the game."

The coaching staff was totally pleased with Saturday's efforts, he says, savoring some of the highlights of their first team victory. "We ran seven offensive plays in the second half so their defense was stopped cold. Bobby Durkin, a sophomore defensive end was tremen-

McGee appointment

Secretary of Human Services Philip W. Johnston recently announced the appointment of Donna J. McGee of Cohasset as Director of Personnel and Labor Relations for the Executive Office of Human Services."With the appointment of Donna McGee, the Executive Office of Human Services gains an excellent administrator with a wealth of experience in state government," said Secretary Johnston.

McGee served until recently as the Deputy Director of the Governor's Office of Human Resources and prior to that as Administrative Assistant to Johnston in the House of Representatives.

A graduate of Bay State Junior College and Boston College's program for Women in Government, McGee recently attended Harvard University's Kennedy School of Government program for Senior Executives of the Commonwealth. She is the Chairperson of the Cohasset Democratic Town Committee, former president of the Friends of the Cohasset Library, and Chairperson of the Cohasset Government Structure Committee.

McGee is married and the mother of three children.

Summer school policy

At last week's school committee meeting, members discussed the possible implementation of a policy for students obtaining course credit through summer school.

Last month the committee discussed the need to establish a policy to eliminate the problem of students attending the six-week school to make-up courses failed in the regular school year. Some members, including Chairman Joseph Nedrow, felt that restricting the policy may dissuade some borderline students from ever obtaining a diploma.

According to the school administration, the policy will hopefully require all students to apply themselves more vigorously to their school work during the September to June school year. Also, better attendance might result.

The proposed policy, which has been posted for student and teacher input, states that a student will not be allowed to make up a course or point deficiency in summer school unless that student has achieved a minimum of 50 grade points in that course. A student will not be allowed to accumulate more than ten points through summer school courses over a four-year period.

The policy would also state that the high school will award only half-credit for any summer school course. In case of a prolonged illness or other acceptable reason, the teacher and guidance counselor will recommend to the principal whether that student may attend summer school and receive full credit.

The PSO notified the school committee that its concern centered on the student who "may become so discouraged that he/she may never earn a diploma so vital to every student no matter that course in life he/she decides to take. Many felt this would not water down the meaning of the Cohasset diploma. The diploma taken in context with each individual's transcript and record of achievements is the true meaning of a diploma."

Conley remains

Richard Conley will retain his position as Cohasset's acting fire captain as a result of the board of selectmen's meeting Wednesday, Sept. 26 with Fire Chief Martin Dooley.

Because of Conley's four-time failure to pass the captain's exam, Chief Dooley felt that someone else should have the chance to act as captain. Dooley explained that he had "no problems with his (Conley's) performance." I'm just trying to expose everybody to the position," Dooley added.

All five fire department members who had taken the series of captain's exams failed each time. Even Conley, who had obtained the highest mark on the exams, failed to make the passing grade of seventy percentile.

Selectmen John DeBassio and Cliff Mitman felt that to rescind Conley's appointment and chose another person to fill the captain's position at this time would disrupt the continuity on which the fire department thrives. If a new person is appointed and then fails to pass the exam in May, the position will have to be filled once again.

The board of selectmen decided to preserve the continuity within the fire department and voted unanimously to keep on Richard Conley as acting fire captain until May of next year. As of Monday, Acting Capt. Conley has been assigned Acting Chief while Chief Dooley is on vacation.

In other business, the board of selectmen appointed Agnes McCann to the board of library trustees Wednesday, Sept. 26 after recommendations from other library trustees. Ms. McCann will hold this appointment until April 1985.

PSO meeting

The Fall Membership of the Parent School Organization is set for Thursday, Oct. 18, at 7 p.m. in the New Study Hall at the high school.

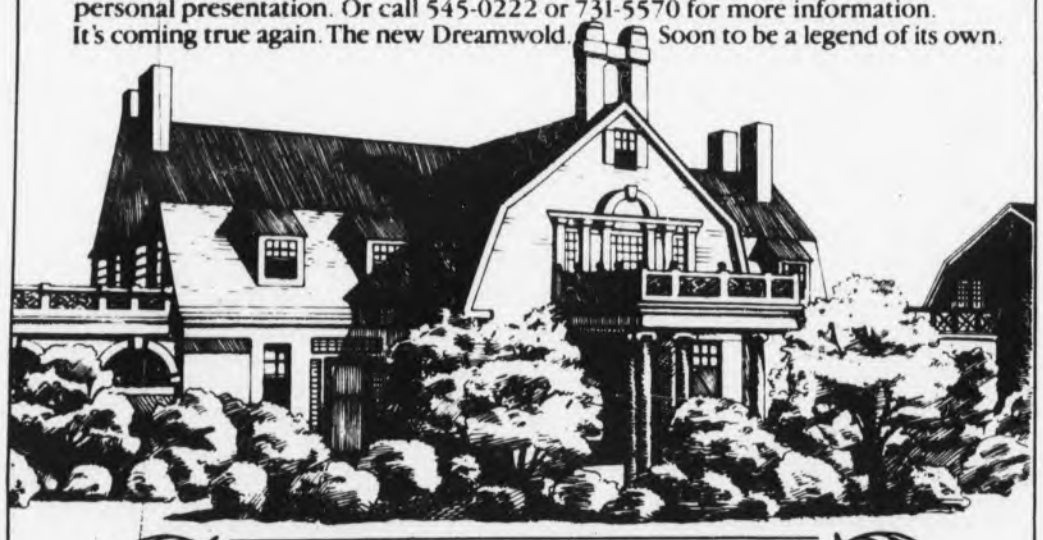
The PSO invites all parents of school-age children to meet school administrators, teachers, school committee members, the PSO board, and parents new to the school system.

After a brief orientation and discussion of goals for 1984-85 and volunteer opportunities, the PSO will present Moderator Mike Gill, Health Education Coordinator, and his panel, Carolyn Contis, Home Economics teacher, Marilyn Watson, Physical Education Chairman, and Patricia Wunschel, Home Economics "Teacher of the Year" who will explore "Critical Health Issues in the Public Schools Today."

They will share their expertise in the areas of nutrition, substance abuse, fitness, prevention, stress management, etc. Activities Chairman Marybeth Lean promises an "enjoyable, informative evening" for everyone.

Once upon a time, not so far away, a brave Copper King built an enchanted kingdom in a land by the sea.

There in Scituate, he surrounded his mansion with idyllic pastures and formal gardens. Then built a fairy tale tower to watch over his dream.



Some said he was eccentric. Others said he was vain. But in truth, the legendary millionaire, Thomas Lawson, was building a beautiful haven as a gift for his beloved family. And in 1903, Dreamwold came true.

Now it's coming true again. All the majesty, privacy and splendor that was Dreamwold. In twenty-six unique Victorian condominium residences encircling a spectacular rose garden and beautiful swimming pool.

Dreamwold. A magnificent blend of historic restoration and new construction as only Boston's premier developer, Parencorp, could do.

This fall, Dreamwold is available at pre-completion prices, starting in the mid-100's. Visit Dreamwold between 11:00 AM and 6:00 PM daily for a personal presentation. Or call 545-0222 or 731-5570 for more information.

It's coming true again. The new Dreamwold. Soon to be a legend of its own.

All parents are part of our P.S.O.

By Lisa J. Messersmith

Involvement is a major priority for the Parent School Organization (P.S.O.), according to President Robin Suhrbier.

Not only does the P.S.O. seek to continue as liason between parents and schools, but it also seeks to include new and currently inactive parents within its growing organization.

For the General Membership Meeting Oct. 18, the P.S.O. will send invitations to all new parents in Cohasset. "We are becoming more visible," Suhrbier stated; but she would like to see more parents get involved with the P.S.O.

Suhrbier explains that each parent is a member of the P.S.O. and is welcome at every meeting. Regular meetings are held the second thursday of every month.

Active parents in the P.S.O. are directly involved as advisors in several school programs. Karin Bartow began the Arts Enrichment Program to bring arts into the schools. Co-chairpersons Judy Volungis and Linda Summers have continued Bartow's work to obtain several grants for the arts.

Guidance Counselor Ed Leonard with P.S.O. senior high school representatives Linda Starmer and Bob Davenport plan a counseling program for children of divorced parents. Leonard has also scheduled speakers to give career counseling to high school seniors.

Robin Suhrbier describes the P.S.O.'s relationship with teachers, administrators, and school committee members as close. She states, "Recommendations we make come with a lot of weight behind them. We are supportive and work with them."

The P.S.O. originates several fundraising activities and events. School calendars prepared by the P.S.O. will come out this month, and Suhrbier hopes the parents will respond to the calendar's message with their active and financial support. Movies and future a Phone-A-Thon are also planned to raise funds for school programs.

Money raised from P.S.O.-supported school dances aided such programs as the computer and audio visual departments in the high school. Part of this money is saved for the sponsoring class' senior year activities.

The P.S.O's priorities also mean getting more kids involved in school planning and managing school events. Members of the P.S.O will organize three different student-run committees - activities, projects, and publicity - to incorporate more kids who want to be active but who do not want to run for offices within the student council.

At the P.S.O. General Membership Meeting Oct. 18, Suhrbier believes that "new parents will bring new ideas." At that time, Mary Beth Lean will introduce a new health and nutrition program connected with school athletics. Suhrbier encourages all parents to attend this meeting.

She feels the Parent School Organization will continue to act in an atmosphere of cooperation, involvement, and potential. "We're a working group...not a complaining group," concludes Suhrbier.

No drainage violation found

Although the Board of Health last week issued an order to stop all further construction, it has been determined that R. Murray Campbell's septic system is not draining into the town's storm drain system.

According to Health Agent Joseph Godzik, complaints were phoned into his office, stating that Campbell's septic system was being repaired, and effluent was pouring into the storm drains on Old Pasture Road.

An order was issued by the Board of Health to stop any repair work until a dye test could be completed to see if any effluent was breaking out into the town's drainage system.

Godzik completed the tests Tuesday and notified Campbell that effluent from his septic system was not being rerouted into the storm drain, and that there was no reason to halt the repairs to his system.

Campbell said this week that he has been making repairs to the surface water drainage system on his property because of a previous leakage problem. He admitted a small amount of effluent may have runoff into the storm drain, but it was no a continuous formation.

Health Agent Godzik agreed the problem was not great, and it was only a temporary leakage that did not greatly affect the storm drain system.

Campbell has been an outspoken opponent of the town's attempt to construct an alternative wastewater treatment plan. He said his actions against the plan have earned him "a lot of enemies in this town " who would have contacted the Health Board about any possible violation

School board ponders warrant article

The school committee this week awarded a contract to a Chicopee company, to repair the most seriously-deteriorated sections of the junior/senior high school roof. The members also voted to reserve a warrant article in the November town meeting, requesting additional appropriations to complete the remaining areas of the roof.

The roofing firm, Titan Roofing, Inc., submitted a low bid of $309,950 to complete the areas of the junior-/senior high school roof which have been previously determined as the sections in the most dire need of repair.

In addition, the school committee voted 4-1, to reserve space within the Novemeber special town meeting warrant to request a maximum of $225,000 to complete the four remaining sections of the high school roof.

Before any appropriation request is finalized, the school committee will meet with the School Facilities Committee, the Advisory Committee, and the Capital Budget Committee to discuss the feasibility of funding the additional project.

The Deer Hill School roof contract was previously awarded to MacDonald, Sprague Co. for a total of $128,000. That project is now two-thirds complete, according to Superintendent Eugene Crowell. The two-school roof package totaled $30,000 less than the $551,000 appropriated for the repairs.

Included in the company's bid to the school department, is the base price of $264,600 to complete the most immediate repairs, together with an additional $45,350 to repair three other sections of the roof last repaired before 1968.

Superintendent Eugene Crowell specified five reasons why the school committee should consider requesting additional appropriations to complete the entire high school roof. One reason is that although studies have indicated other sections of the high school roof are in more immediate need of repair, the remaining sections, such as the foyer connecting the gymnasiums, "could go at any minute."

He also noted that according to the state School Buildings Assistance Bureau, there is a very good chance Cohasset will receive matching funds for the entire roof project. And any additions included in the project will be allowable and fundable along with the original funding request.

A third reason for requesting the extra appropriations in November, he said, would be to allow enough time to go through the state-mandated design and bidding procedures, with a plan to begin and complete construction in the summer when school is out. Because of strict bidding laws, there is a lot of time spent investigating designers and contractors, and if the appropriations were awarded at the annual town meeting, repairs could not begin until the fall, Crowell explained.

The repair of the additional areas could also add to the substantial energy savings estimated by the architect because of the insulation factor.

Crowell also noted that Titan Roofing Co. was highly recommended by schools and stores throughout the state which had previously contracted with the firm. He also explained that they will be completing the job at

Anyone who travels regularly for business or pleasure should certainly take advantage of the frequent flyer programs offered by many of the airlines. Application blanks are generally available at ticket counters. If you fly a certain number of miles on that airline, you may earn premiums or free travel. Some people do not bother with these programs because they think they may never acculumate the necessary mileage. However, it is easier than it sounds. One major airline credits passengers with at least 1,000 miles on each flight, no matter how short. Another gives extra credit for flying business class or first class on trans-Atlantic flights. Still others offer special mileage bonuses during certain periods, and to some destinations.

Coach guides his team toward taste of victory

dous. He really solidified the charge from outside with seven tackles. That led the team," he adds.

Pisano had been an assistant varsity coach at Cohasset for three years when head coach John Leone was granted a year's leave of absence. Pisano applied for the lead position, with the understanding that he would not be offered the job if there were more qualified candidates, Athletic Director Clark Chatterton recommended Pisano for the position and the change was made this year. In addition to coaching football, he also is a varsity coach of the Scituate girls' softball team.

He laughs when listing the variety of sports he has coached throughout his teaching career in Scituate. For 15 years he was assistant football coach at Scituate High School, moving with close friend Leone to Cohasset four years ago. He has coached basketball many years, as head and as assistant coach. And in 1974-1975, he was a basketball coach at South Shore Vocational High School.

Pisano also has tried his hand at officiating, and last year presided over bakstball games in the Old Colony, South Shore and Mayflower leagues.

A Boston College graduate, Pisano has been a follower of sports since he can remember. It is a tradition he has no intentions of relinquishing.

Yet, coaching football remains a challenge at Cohasset High School. Because there are no feeder programs, giving youngsters game experience and coaching, Pisano and his staff must begin from the ground level.

"The game of football has changed so much and there is much ground to cover in a limited amount of time. This is especially true in Cohasset where these kids lack competitive experience in football. That's why it's so important to have good assistant coaches, which I have in Cohasset. They take over the responsibility I pass on to them," he adds.

Coach Phil Pisano

Pisano considers himself a lucky coach to have assistants Jim Sullivan as the defensive and line coach, Bill Fallon, the secondary and receiver coach, and Bob Silvia and Kevin Dooley as his freshman coaches.

Although he is only two games into the new season, Pisano has sampled victory and is enjoying the benefits.

"There are actually a couple of reasons why I like coaching here so much. First, I am directly involved with a great bunch of outstanding kids. I look upon these kids, next to my family and my classroom students, as part of my family. The relationships we form with these athletes are personal and strong. We're together Monday through Saturday for two to three hours a day. I enjoy these kids tremendously," he candidly admits.

This novice head coach also admires the teams' three co-captains, who, he says, "are good leaders and communicators. And when you have that type of situation, it is very positive for the entire team."

Thus far, Pisano said he and his players are "having a lot of fun" testing ideas developed from his 19 years of coaching experience.

When asked to size up the team's prospects for the 1984 season, Pisano does not flinch.

"Objectively, people measure success with wins and losses. But that's not our primary concern this year. Sure, I love to win. But through football, these kids have an avenue where they can grow and mature emotionally. My prime motive is to have the kids enjoy the game.

Football can teach self respect through the idea of interdependence and teamwork. They learn to get along with each other and that's what life is all about," he says.

Pisano is anxious for his team to fulfill some long-awaited goals. "Everytime they practice and play the game, I want these players to become better as a team. And through that, they can relish the relationships that have grown as a result."

As for the immediate future, Pisano's forecast is bright. "They've tasted victory now. It's difficult to forget that feeling," he says confidently.

Special Museum Tour Oct. 17

The Cohasset Historical Society and the Cohasset Recreation Department will hold a special end-of-summer guided tour of the Society's two museums located at Cohasset Center at 11 a.m. Wednesday, Oct. 17.

The Historical Society's Captain John Wilson Historical House and Maritime Museum ended their regular summer season on Sept. 30, but will be open for the co-sponsored special tour. Cohasset and area residents and visitors are invited. Please pre-resister for the tour by calling the Recreation Department's Town Hall office, 383-6791. This marks the third year of Recreation Department sponsored museum tours held at the Historical Society's facilities.

The Capt. Wilson Historical House is an 1810 home holding a representative collection of antique furnishings, furniture, kitchenware, children's toys and artworks donated from a number of Cohasset's oldest houses. The Maritime Museum, a late-1700's ship Chandlery, contains numerous artifacts, documents, prints and paintings relating to the town's seafaring past during America's great "Age of Sail".

Included are relics from some of the numerous shipwrecks which occurred locally, equipment and gear from the town's 19th century mackerel fishing fleets, and the story of the famous Minot's Ledge Lighthouse located off Cohasset shores. The Maritime Museum also houses a general collection of historical artifacts from the town's earliest days and an exhibit of stone tools of the Quonahasset Indians.

Each of the Society's two museums is unique and each portrays the historical heritage of a small New England seacoast town. Please register early for this special end of the season tour.

around town

☐ The class of 1985 is in the process of putting their year-book together, beginning with their patron-sponsors page. If you would like to support this it is $10 for a sponsor, $15 for a patron. Make your check out to Cohasset High School and send it to Pat Wunschel, along with the way you want your name/names to appear.

☐ Saturday afternoon was a sad one for those of us along Fred Piepenbrink's postal route . . . it was his last day. That special smile that Fred always wears, as well as his "news" that he always has for us, will certainly be missed. He will still be spotted around town, in "civies". Good luck, and have a happy retirement, Fred.

☐ Congratulations to Richard J. Bond, executive director of the Boston Children's Service Association, located in Boston. He has graduated from the Senior Executive Program at the National Child Welfare Leadership Center, affiliated with the School of Social Work, University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. Mr. Bond manages New England's oldest children's agency.

☐ The National Merit Scholarship Corporation has notified seniors who are being commended or have been named Semifinalists in the National Merit Program. Those who will receive Letters of Commendation are: Christopher Crowley, Michael A. DeSantis, Gregory P. Igo, Mark S. Lahive, William A. Langmaid, Nora M. Leary, Mason E. Sandell and Garin Walsh. Elizabeth Riley and Staci A. Stobart are Semifinalists in the competition for Merit Sholarships to be offered in 1985. Commended students placed in the top 5 percent of all participants. The Semifinalists have to meet additional requirements, and will be notified in April as to who the winners will be.

John Jackson (No. 88) prepares to gain possession of the ball as a Umana player fails the interception.

☐ Last Saturday was a special night indeed for Karen Ford. Karen's husband, Chris, with some help from their children, arranged a surprise birthday party for her. It surely was a surprise, and a grand time had by all . . . especially the "birthday girl".

☐ Congratulations to Donna McGee and the Cohasset Democratic Committee for winning the award of a Voter Registration Incentive Grant. The Grant was awarded with the hopes that with those funds the committee will "be able to carry out your plans for registration in your community". Now is the time to help the committee out . . . register to vote by Oct. 9 (the deadline for Voter Registration for the General Election). For more information contact Donna McGee at 383-9114.

☐ Belated birthday greetings to Louise Nason. Bill Dowding seems to have adjusted very well to be 60!

☐ Best wishes to Eileen Kurtz on her 59th birthday on Oct. 5th.

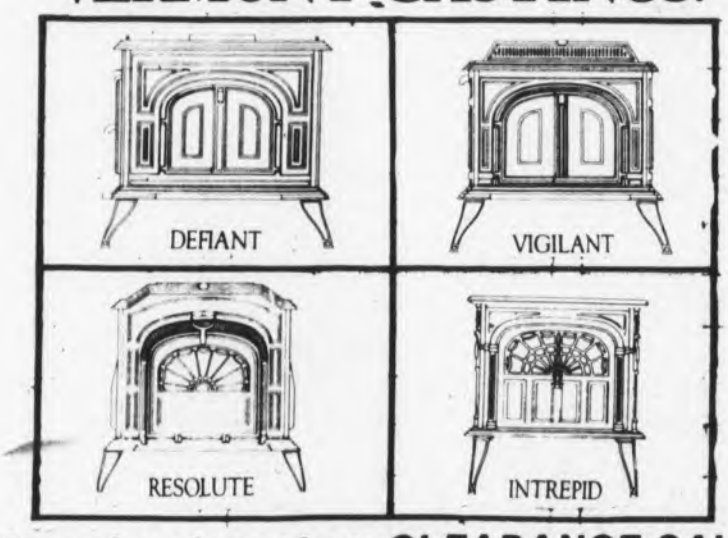
☐ The third organizational meeting of the Cohasset High School Sailing Team was held on Oct. 2 at the High School. The team is a newly formed one, and the coaches are Fran Charles (925-1035) and Sam Wakeman (383-6641). A lot of "Skippers" have shown interest, and they are still looking for more that are interested. Watch for the next meeting, or give one of the coaches a call.

☐ The local Sons of Italy lodge has named state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray of our town as this years recipient of their "Good Public Servant Award." Joseph R. Angeramo, president of Lodge 1850, said Mary Jeanette's efforts on behalf of her community far exceed her state duties. In 1978, she was responsible for raising more than $8,000 for Hull following the blizzard, he said. She was recently presented an award by Concerned Citizens for Drug Prevention, he added.

Mary Jeanette will receive the award during a presentation ceremony Oct. 6 (Saturday) at the sons of Italy Hall, Route 3A, Hingham. Among other "feathers" in Mary Jeanette Murray's cap are: home service chairman of the American Red Cross for 33 years, 18 years as secretary of the Girl Scouts, chairman of the Heart Fund, president of the Cohasset Women's Club, president of Auxiliary Post 118 of the American Legion and a member of the Hingham-Hull Veteran of Foreign Wars Auxiliary. Tickets for this ceremony are $15 per person and may be purchased from Lodge members or by calling Sal Tramontana at 826-9071 or Bruce Arnold at 383-0363. And our sincere congratulations to Mary Jeanette on a well-deserved award.

☐ A belated happy birthday to Jim Wallace, a grand guy who certainly knows how to make every day seem like a special one.

☐ All of our teams at the High School are doing an outstanding job . . . winners every one! Why not add your little bit to their grand efforts, and attend a game or two? Once you do, you'll be hooked and everyone will be happy! Nothing is better for a team than a bunch of loyal fan . . . check the schedules and GO



☐ That's all for this week. Keep the news coming . . .

Jennie M. Packard has been named a semifinalist in the 1985 Merit Scholarship competition, according to the National Merit Scholarship Corporation in Evanston, Illinois.

Packard, a senior at the Cambridge School of Weston, is the daughter of John and Lynn Packard, 53 Pleasant St. She was selected for the honor on the basis of her outstanding performance on the 1983 PSAT qualifying test, and is eligible to compete as a finalist for a National Merit Scholarship by fulfilling additional requirements representing academic excellence.

Vintage fashion show

Mrs. Standard models a Victorian garden dress. Other models will be Carol Martin, Debbie Cunningham, Amy Golden and Tish Jordan.

Victorian dresses and civil war era gowns will be featured in a vintage clothing fashion show and luncheon at the South Shore Country Club, Hingham, Friday, Oct. 19.

The fashion show to benefit the Cohasset League of Women Voters will be presented by Nancy Standard of Greenwich, Conn. Mrs. Standard's collection contains more than 150 pieces, some of museum quality.

Mrs. Standard started to collect vintage clothing about ten years ago, when she first became program director for a senior citizen center. She asked some of the seniors to model their wedding dresses. After receiving tremendous response to this show, she began collecting hats for them to model.

Soon her collection grew into entire vintage outfits as she picked up more antique clothing locally at antique shops and tag sales. As word of her collection grew, people from all over began contacting her about their family heirlooms, donating them for her fashion shows.

The "Vintage Collection" has been shown all over the New York area, including the Westchester Country Club and the Larchmont Women's Club.

The cost of the fashion show and luncheon is $15.00. For ticket and babysitting information, please contact Laura Atherton at 383-1860 or Peggy Corrigan at 383-0296.

We're changing

Autumn brings about many changes. The air is clear, the sky is a deeper blue than at any time during the year. As the shade of leaves turns to a deeper hue, and winds whirl them to the ground, we are reminded about the changes in our seasons and in our lives.

These changes are witnessed in the increased activity of our lives. As if we were in a deep slumber during the summer, by fall we have awakened, refreshed and ready to meet new challenges.

The onslaught of civic and social meetings fill our calendars as school groups and municipal organizations prepare plans for the new year. Fall is a busy, bustling time of year. With the crisp surroundings of cool air and blue skies, we feel physically able to accomplish our new goals.

We at the Mariner feel this sense of change and need for further accomplishment. Beginning this week, the seven-newspaper chain collectively known as the Mariner newspapers, will be joined by two new editions, the Weymouth News and the Braintree Forum. This is an exciting time for us, and we eagerly anticipate this challenge.

We want to assure our readers in Cohasset, that the addition of our two new editions will not negatively affect the emphasis we have always placed on this town. The Cohasset Mariner will remain, as always, devoted to the large and small news events of our town.

The only changes which may be seen in Cohasset is the classified advertising section which will now reach Mariner readers from Braintree to Pembroke. That's a positive change.

We are devoted to Cohasset, and attempt each week to bring you the objective facts of events which occurred here throughout the week. We have never, and will never, dilute your hometown weekly with an abundance of news occurring in Weymouth or in Marshfield. The Cohasset Mariner is for Cohasset only, and no one is going to encroach upon your right to have a newspaper serving your community.

From time to time, we will be publishing an interesting news or feature story that eminated from another community, but is of interest to Cohasset residents. We will only publish that article if we can justify it's newsworthiness for our community.

The Cohasset Mariner will hopefully be a better paper, focusing more closely on what is happening here, beginning right now. Fall is a time of change, and we intend to make this autumn a season of change for the better.

As always, we need your input and advice on ways in which we may better serve your interests and needs. Constructive criticism and advice is always welcome. Our attention is always turned toward your voice in the community.

Selectmen's meeting

The next scheduled session of the Board of Selectmen will be held October 9 at 7:30 p.m. at Town Hall. The regular weekly meetings will be held Monday evenings beginning in two weeks. The change was made for next week because of the Monday holiday.

This world has two kinds of people

By Claire McDonough

"The world," I told the Dragon, "is made up of two kinds of people."

"The bad and the good?" he asked.

I shook my head. "No. There are too many shades of gray. Most people are partly bad and partly good, and anyway I'm not up to making value judgments about other people."

"You probably aren't in any position to cast the first stone," he agreed. "I'll bet you're talking about the people who push and the people who lean—you know, the people who are willing to get the work done, and those who expect other people to do it for them."

"Uh, uh." Because sometimes people are willing to get out there and work, but other times they're too tired, or too busy, or they're not sure what they should do. And anyway, that gets us back into value judgments."

"Well, then," he asked. "What are the two kinds? And I don't want to hear anything more about my eating all the good things out of the Chinese food."

"I wouldn't dream of it," I told him. "Even though it was incredibly selfish, particularly since you ate everything on your plate while we were still in the restaurant, and it was my leftovers that were in the refrigerator. But far be it from me to bring up the subject.

"No, the two kinds of people are those who can say goodbye and leave a gathering, and those who say goodbye and then launch into a long conversation.

"This wouldn't be too bad, but invariably these people marry each other. The result is that at every party you can see one spouse standing by the car shifting from one foot to the other and trying to look interested in the hosts' crab grass while the other spouse is still in the living room and embarking on the third twenty minute segment of a discourse on soil erosion or Chinese poetry."

The Dragon nodded. "I remember the last time we had a party. Fauna's husband got the tires on his car rotated while he was waiting for her to finish a story about how she got lost on the Red Line."

"She only does that because she wants to hover around the food table while her husband can't see her," I told him. "What she really wanted to finish was the clam dip.

"I was thinking more about the time Flora and Rowan were here. She had been to a school committee meeting and she was trying to explain what 'vertical articulation' is when Rowan told her it was time to leave. She stopped talking mid-syllable, put on her coat, said goodnight to everyone and walked out the door.

"Forty-five minutes later she came back in looking for Rowan and found him explaining the landward moving tendencies of barrier beaches as modified by littoral drift to a coastal geologist.

"For someone who isn't into casting stones," he told me, you have pretty good aim. And I might add, if the only things you have to worry about are whether I ate the pork fried rice and people who linger after they say goodbye, you must have a pretty darn good life. These aren't exactly earthshattering problems, you know."

"I'm not so sure," I replied. "Everyone wonders where Chernenkov is . For all we know, he might be waiting for Mrs. Chernenkov to finish telling her sister how to compost. Maybe if it weren't for that, he'd be over here talking to President Reagan about nuclear disarmament right now.

"And possibly," I smiled, "he would have dropped off some shrimp tempura on the way."

Rep Murray key to tax committee

Letters

To the Editor:

The regular schedule of hearings by Legislative Committees is now completed, and the Committee on Taxation held seventeen public hearings, covering over one thousand separate bills.

The committee considers legislation on such topics as state and local tax and spending limits, tax benefits for our elderly and disabled citizens, the administration of taxes at the state and local level, assessing practices equitale distribution formulas on local aid, and a review of the impact of tax exempt property on the municipal tax base, just to name a few issues. Long range efforts have begun this year to solve the fiscal problem of a significant revenue impact that will be experienced locally as imminent appeals on the assessment of public utility properties.

A major portion of the committee's work this session involved the Governor's Mass/Bank proposal. Despite the fact that the bill has been reported out of committee, members are still strongly involved.

And finally, the work of the Special Commission of Tax Reform will be getting underway. The Taxation Committee has referred over 250 legislative items to it for review.

Representative Mary Jeanette Murray (R) of Cohasset has been a key member of the Committee of Taxation, and has significantly contributed to the work of the Committee during the legislative session.

As Chairman of the Committee of Taxation, I believe that your readers should be aware of the outstanding public service which has been provided not only to her constituents, but to the Commonwealth as a whole. Rep. Murray is a credit to her district and to the Legislature.

Bloomfield portrays a world's 'Countdown'

Before." Professor Bloomfield is a "pessimistic optimist", confident our lives will not necessarily be snuffed by the spreading cloud of a nuclear attack. There are options, decisions and decision makers who will lead us to our ultimate path.

Settled in one of several comfortable chairs within the den of his elegant Beach Street home, Professor Bloomfield is confident his scenario will provide a worldwide audience with answers to questions, and supply questions where they were none.

It is an educational film, and a vehicle by which his ideas will be expressed to a vast audience, he says. A quiet man with a frequent smile, Bloomfield says whether the professional reviews are good or bad, it is his intention that this movie will instruct.

"Some producers from WGBH in Boston, where I have been a foreign affairs commentator, approached me about writing a realistic movie for HBO. I designed a scenario of an international crisis and worked with them on it, on the condition that this would teach and help prevent such an occurrence from happening," the professor recalls.

"They were very cooperative. And I think the result was a most serious effort by the entertainment industry to present the kind of problem I have worked with and lived with for many years. I feel very positive about this project."

Within this den overlooking a serene Little Harbor, hang photographs of dign itaries and world officials with whom he has shared experiences and his expertise. Jimmy Carter, for whom he helped to develop a global refugee policy during the Cambodia famine, is pictured within several of the autographed frames.

"Brezinski called me," Bloomfield notes matter-of-factly, "while I was on sabbatical in Geneva and asked if I would take over as Director of Global Affairs for the National Security Council. I couldn't turn it down and I came back to government."

It was during the Carter administration that Bloomfield had firsthand knowledge of the Iranian hostage crisis and the failed rescue attempt. He helped to mobilize the United Nations support of the American efforts to release the hostages. As part of the small Presidential security staff, he was also involved in the national reaction to the Afghanistan invasion.

When asked if the real life dramas enacted during his tenure on the security council have provided a realistic background for his fictional efforts, Bloomfield replies affirmatively.

"Iran is on the Soviet border. In the event of something such as the Afghanistan invasion, one move by Americans and our European allies might be to form a blockade around those countries. This is a move some administration officials favored during the Iranian hostage crisis. I favored the rescue attempt. A blockade is a slow motion way to get into a worse situation. The rescue attempt, a SWAT-type maneuver to free the hostages, would have been another Entebbe if it had succeeded," he continues.

The professor said the world has never been closer to nuclear war than during the Kennedy blockade of Cuba. "We were two supergiants on a collision course. In the HBO movie, there are scenes of Strategic Air Command B 52's being redeployed to civilian airports. I remember seeing exactly that when I watched TV news broadcasts during the missile crisis. It's called cautionary redeployment. These are the steps that can lead to the crunch that no one wants."

Despite the notoriety revolving around this new media celebrity, Bloomfield will remain a professor and observer of global politics. He wants this movie to succeed in warning people of the dangers, and educating them of the options we have to avoid castastrophe.

"If 50 million people watch this film and think hard, including the people in Washington and the President, we will not see this as a yes or no situation, It's not "The Day After," and that's what I intended.

"I am scared every time I see it.It is so much like the actual crisis atmosphere I have experienced. I am not a fatalist. With common sense and good publicity of the important issues, people will see this movie and ask what they should do. There are going to be more crises because the U.S. is not in harmony with much of the world. So we must manage our crises without getting into a war."

Although he is not politically partisan, Bloomfield is growing concerned with a major policy of the Reagan administration - the build up of increasingly sophisticated nuclear weapons.

"I am worried that several things are happening to make it less easy for decision-makers to wait out a crisis. These weapons are becoming so threatening that decision-makers are unable to wait to see if the crisis is accidental. People must be aware that these new weapons may make a crisis less or more stable," he explains, adding that the probablity of a nuclear accident occurring now is not likely, although it will become increasingly possible if newer, more sensitive weapons are continually being devised and appropriations are secured for them.

The last scene of the film . . . a TV news journalist is reporting live from a U.S. carrier when explosions rock the Persian Gulf and his transmission goes dead. A second reporter speeds to Andrews Air Force Base to report on the maneuver code-named "Looking Glass," in which the President and his closest advisers board an airborne command post to avoid the devastation of a possible nuclear attack. As their plane takes off, the broadcast is pre-empted by the Emergency Broadcast System.

Common improvements planned by boards

At an unusual joint meeting between the Historical Commission and the Cohasset Common Historic District Commission, it was decided that an application for state funding to improve the common will be completed.

Tree and Park Supt. Peter Laugelle, who has been the expeditor of this grant application process, will submit an application to the state, at the insistance of the two town commissions. Selectmen previously sanctioned the proposal application.

A preliminary proposal must be submitted to the Department of Environmental Management by Nov. 1, Laugelle explained, if Cohasset hopes to obtain any matching funds to maintain and improve the common area. Laugelle predicted as much as $300,000 could be awarded municipalities which apply for the matching state funds.

Laugelle presented a list of items which would enhance and improve the common grounds. Replacing and raising the granite curbing around the common would cost about $15 per foot for 5000 square feet, he said.

Repairing the flagpole seal may cost about $5000. Constructing a cement wall around the duck pond would total about $20,000; installing a gunite bottom to the deteriorating pond would be about $30,000. Laugelle said suggestions have been made to install gas lights around the common, construct a brick entrance to Town Hall and plant more trees on the common grounds.

Repaving sidewalks has been mentioned by residents as a possible project, he added, along with repaving the Town Hall parking lot.

The town will submit a preliminary proposal, he said, and eligibility should be determined by Dec. 1. If Cohasset did obtain state money, Laugelle explained, we would have the funds by April 10 and have a year and a half to complete all specified improvements.

Several residents attended Tuesday night's joint meeting, and discussed the proposals specified for repair and improvement.

Commission members were supportive of Laugelle's suggestions, and many particularly endorsed a proposal to bury all utilities surrounding the common. Although it is unknown how much such a project would cost, or how long it would take, they agreed it would enhance the common area to eliminate all poles and utility wires.

Tom Atkinson of Highland Avenue suggested that the town investigate the liability the utility companies would provide in re-establishing connections to the homes surrounding the common. He also noted it would make sense for the town to complete mainte-

Murray's memos

Report from the State House

By Mary Jeanette Murray

Last week we revealed the "Fiscal Follies" of the Dukakis Administration.

The revenue figures compiled by the Department of Revenue are as revealing as the Department's warnings of caution regarding revenue increases.

A strange thing occurred over the past two fiscal years. Each month the Department of Revenue suggested we should be cautious, the revenues increased. At the same time, unemployment was down and the economy was booming.

So far in the first two months of this fiscal year, the Commonwealth has taken in $208 million more than last year.

Last July, Governor Dukakis vetoed the Republican sponsored budget provisions passed by the Legislature, designed to send local communities $31 million in new local aid, give taxpayers relief in the form of a $200 increase in the personal exemption for all taxpayers and repeal the tax on unearned income of the elderly.

Massachusetts Municipal Association is the most recent group to support an override of the Governor's veto of the local aid proposal, joining Citizens for Limited Taxation, and taxpayer groups across the state.

The Governor uses the excuse that he vetoed the local aid proposal because of the formula for distribution. Yet all he had to do was suggest a new formula to the Legislature while it was being debated. There is no doubt that his formula would have been accepted. Instead, our communities will receive nothing if the Governor's veto stands.

Our fight to override the governor's veto is a tough one. The Legislature's choice in this matter will reflect two different philosophies: one, the "Spend-It-All" attitude of the current Dukakis Administration; and the other, concerned about the enormous tax burden of the citizens of Massachusetts.

The money is there for a tax cut. Even the Dukakis Administration admits that the surplus could be greater than they originally thought (their second revised figure). It is up to the Legislature to act responsibly and override the governor's veto of these crucial tax cuts.

Mask-making workshop

Get plastered! Not literally but in a fun way by participating in a life mask-making workshop at the South Shore Art Center.

Geared to teens and adults, the workshop taught by the South Shore's own mask making personality, Syma, will be on Thursday, October 18, from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. at the Center, 103 Ripley Road, in Cohasset. Advanced registration is required for this course.

Syma will show participants how to create new personalities for themselves for Halloween, a masked ball or just for fun. And since the masks are created right on the person, the masks will have a perfect fit.

Using plastic gauze bandages, participants will create the masks on themselves or on each other. Syma will discuss the magic and rituals connected with masks and illustrate some ideas for decorating the masks at home.

Syma brings to this workshop the enthusiasm and excitement of creating masks. Her extensive background in the field and her ability to create plaster images will be reflected in the way she works with the participants in this workshop.

School committee member Martha Gjesteby complained that the town is being faced with other substantial town appropriations, and the additional warrant article request was too much of a burden to place on Cohasset taxpayers. Upon the advice of Chairman Joseph Nedrow, who said the committee should seek the advice of committees more attuned to financial matters, Gjesteby said she is willing to meet with the town budget committees to discuss their feelings about the additional funding request.

World of Weather — Climate changes

Do you think Mark Twain said of our New England weather: "If you don't like it, wait a minute?" Most people do, and he was given credit for such a remark by his original publishers, but in fact it does not appear in any of his published works. It is an appropriate saying and we take it's origin for granted.

Likewise, hardy New Englanders take their weather for granted, good, bad, or otherwise. This month let's take a look at our climate.

Climate is the characteristic meteorological conditions of any place or region, and their extremes. There are three important influences responsible for the main features of our regions climate. 1. The latitude (approximately 42 degrees north) places us in the zone of prevailing west to east atmospheric flow in which are encompassed the northward and southward movements of large bodies of air from tropical and polar regions This results in variety and changeability of the weather. 2. We are situated on or near several tracks frequently followed by major storms. This assures us of a rather dependable precipitation supply. 3. Our east-coast location ia a moderating factor affecting temperature extremes of winter and summer.

Hot summer afternoons are frequently relieved by the celebrated "sea breeze," as air flows inland from the cool water surface to displace the warm westerly current. This refreshing east wind is more commonly experienced along the shore than in the interior western suburbs. In winter, under certain conditions, the severity of cold waves is reduced by the nearness of the relatively warm water. The average date of the last freezing temperature in spring is April 8; the latest is May 3, 1874 and 1882. The average date of the first occurrence of freezing temperature in autumn is November 7; the earliest on record is October 5, 1881. This date is for Boston. In suburban areas, especially away from the coast, these dates are later in spring and earlier in autumn by up to one month in the more susceptible localities, such as the bogs.

We have no dry season. For most years the longest run of days without measurable precipitation does not extend much more than two weeks. This may occur at any time of year. Much of the rainfall from June to September comes from showers and thunderstorms. During the rest of the year, storm systems pass more or less regularly and produce precipitation on an average of roughly one day in three. Coastal storms, or "northeasters," are great producers of rain and snow. The main snow season extends from December through March. Periods when the ground is bare of snow may occur at any time in the winter.

Relative humidity has been known to fall as low as five percent (May 10, 1962), but such desert dryness is very rare. Heavy fog occurs on an average of about two days per month with its prevalence increasing eastward from the immediate coast to the open ocean beyond.

The greatest number of hours of sunshine recorded (at Boston) in a month was 390, or 86 percent of possible, in June 1912, while the least was 60 hours, or 21 percent, in December 1972.

Although winds of 32 MPH or higher may be expected on at least one day in every month of the year, gales are both more common and more severe in the winter.

The coldest temperature recorded in Massachusetts was 34 degrees below zero at Birch Hill Dam on January 18, 1957. The hottest day recorded was on August 2, 1975 at Chester and New Bedford when the mercury climbed to 107 degrees.

The greatest 24-hour rainfall was 18.15 inches at Westfield on August 18/19, 1955. The greatest monthly was 28.85 inches also at Westfield in August 1955. The

Networking for success

Networking is playing an important role in how one does business in the 1980's. And it's the popularity of networking that has led to the success of the South Shore Chamber of Commerce's annual Business Expo.

The fourth annual Expo '84 will be held at Lantana, Tuesday, Oct. 16 from 9 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. Admission is free.

The seasoned business person as well as the new business person will find this year's show helpful. The organizing committee has limited the number of businesses in any one category so that there will be a wider spectrum of products and services represented.

Boards target Common repair funding

nance projects before embarking on new additions to the common such as installation of gas lights or more trash barrels, which may be vandalized before the entire project is completed.

Throughout the meeting this week it was noted that the state funds would include a little more than fifty percent of the project costs. The town would have to provide the remaining funds to complete each project.

Laugelle mentioned that without the state funding, many projects will never be completed because of insufficient town budgets. Atkinson questioned whether the town would support paying the remaining portions of the projects which were not included under state funding.

"If we can't get the town to provide funds to maintain the common, how will we get support to provide matching funds for these repairs and improvements?" he asked.

Although no one could supply a definitive answer, everyone agreed an application for the funding should be submitted. If state funding appears probable, the town will be asked to supply the remaining portion of the funds.

Historical Commission chairman Noel Ripley said that group would like to see a mixture of maintenance and innovative projects requested for funding. Laugelle's list of proposals provided a good mixture, they

The Tree and Park Superintendent will investigate the cost and feasibility of installing utilities underground. If found to be a reasonable project, that would have to be completed before any curbing is raised or constructed, members agreed.

Historic district commission members agreed that the project, if awarded, should be used to provide needed maintenance to the common which has long been ignored. Before improvements are added to the area, repairs should be made to the present site, they stated.

As Ripley stated, "if we don't get this funding, nothing will be done. Not one of these proposals could be put through town meeting because people could care less."

Although there was some question as to whether the town would agree to provide the matching funds, both commission urged Laugelle to stay with the project and submit an application for the state monies.

Scholarship award

The Trustees of Thayer Academy are pleased to announce the 1985 competition for the Morris and Ernestine Litchfield Distinguished Scholar Award. Open to all candidates entering the ninth grade, the award is a $2,000 scholarship to be continued for the four years, and to be granted without regard to financial need.

Since the award does not cover the full tuition, those candidates with demonstrated need can expect to receive a financial aid grant sufficient to meet the balance of their needs. The award will be renewed annually, provided the student maintains a B average, and in the judgment of the faculty, is a contributing member of the Academy community.

The competition is open to eighth grade students of all schools. Selection will be based on superior academic ability as evidenced by honor grades, high class standing, and performance on the Secondary School Admission Test (SSAT). Recommendations from two teachers for either the current or the preceding year are also required. Personal qualities such as responsibility, initiative, honor, and concern for others will be considered. Also of interest are special talents which might be artistic, musical, literary, scientific, theatrical or athletic.

Interested persons should call the Thayer Academy Admissions Office (843-3580, ext. 25) or write Admissions Office, Thayer Academy, 745 Washington St., Braintree 02184.

Cohasset fall sports scene

Varsity Field Hockey

The girls started off the week with a victory over an always tough Hull team, 2 to 0. Both Maureen Farren and Lee Sullivan scored for Cohasset and played outstandingly. Kara MacDonald, Anne O'Leary, and Jill Shockman showed remarkable improvement and made valuable contributions. Halfback, Maria Cahill, turned in yet another great effort for Cohasset as well.

The team was not so lucky Wednesday when they were beaten by Sandwich 4 to 1. Cohasset stayed with their opponent until the end of the second half, when things fell apart. Ginny Nussdorfer scored Cohasset's only goal late in the second half.

The girls face Norwell, Tuesday, in Norwell, and former league champs, Duxbury, Thursday, at home.

Boys Varsity Soccer

The boys had two games, one against Norwell, the other against Sandwich. Tuesday, Cohasset lost in Norwell, 3 to 2. Mason Sandell scored Cohasset's first goal assisted by Bobby Shultz. Cohasset's second goal came from David MacDonald who was assisted by Chris Kirkendall.

Cohasset outshot Norwell by a margin of 20 to 8. Unfortunately, Cohasset's shots would not go in, and time ran out too quickly. David MacDonald had a good game for Cohasset.

Thursday, Cohasset destroyed Sandwich 5 to 0. Bobby Shultz, assisted by David MacDonald, scored Cohasset's only goal in the first half. In the second half Mason Sandell, David MacDonald, Chris Kirkendall, and Michael DeSantis picked up two assists, along with Eric Karcher and Mason Sandell who each had one.

"Bobby Shultz had one of his best games," according to Jon Anderson, the team's coach. Fullback, Greg Igo had an outstanding game as well. Goalie, Billy McKenna picked up his fifth shutout.

Cohasset plays in Duxbury on Wednesday, and Anderson feels his team has the talent to play well against the reigning state champs. Friday, Cohasset plays Hanover in Cohasset. "This is a game we must win," says Anderson.

Girls Varsity Soccer

The girls won all three of their games this week. Monday, Cohasset overpowered Norwell, 5 to 0. Kris Pompeo, Sarah Seavey, Jessica Hamilton, Amy Duncombe, and Janet Bagley all scored for Cohasset. Janet Bagley had a great game, and Joanie Chisolm proved to be the mainstay of Cohasset's defense.

Wednesday, Cohasset beat an always rough Rockland team 2 to 1. Carla Lucas and Amy Duncombe both scored. Tara Stanford and Janet DiGorolamo played well. As a team, Cohasset had an outstanding first half.

Cohasset traveled to Whitman/Hanson High School Friday, and picked up another win 1 to 0. Once again, Janet Bagley and Joanie Chisolm played excellent for Cohasset. Sarah Seavey had a fantastic game as well. Goalie, Tracy Fitzpatrick had her third shutout for the season.

Cohasset faces a weak Holbrook team Tuesday, home. Thursday, Cohasset travels to Abington to try and beat the first place team in the small schools' division. Coach, Kennan Startzell, feels his team plays well against good teams and believes Cohasset will win this game.

20K road race

By Mike Carroll

The largest turnout ever is expected at noon this Sunday, Sept. 30, for the 11th Annual Marshfield 20K Road Race. The race has become a tradition in Marshfield, always on the last Sunday of September. This year's race has drawn an enormous response from local businesses, according to race director Peter Bennett. Rockland Trust company has become a major sponsor of this year's race, donating T-shirts and trophies. Numerous other local businesses have given their support including Jack Vercollone, Verc family businesses; Lou Bournazos, Lou's 139; Art Ayre, Art's Mobile; Ocean Spray, L. Knife Distributors; Ocean Cafe; Marsh Insurance; Mariner Newspapers and Mariner Print Shop; McDonald's; Hyde Athletic Shoe Company; Hendrie's Ice Cream; Pepsi-Cola of Milton; Angelo's Supermarkets; Ming Dynasty; Mug 'N Muffin; Arthur and Pat's; and Lincoln Trust Co.

This year's race will begin at Marshfield High School at noon with pre-registration tables open at 11 a.m. The first 100 entrants will receive a T-shirt, and at this late date, there are only a few T-shirts left. As usual, trophies and gifts will be awarded to the top three places in numerous age categories, and a special Mariner trophy will be awarded to the overall winner of the race. Refreshments will be served to all the runners after the race.

Interestingly enough the course has not changed and still remains one of the most difficult 12.4 mile races in eastern Massachusetts. The runners travel on Forest St., Valley Path, Oak St., Union St., Pine St., and Highland St. All the mile markers are clear and there will be numberous water stops. Mile splits will be available at key points in the race. Last year many of the people who live on the course were very gracious and the runners appreciate your water and encouragement. We hope to see many of the same residents out again this year to help the runners along.

Skating lessons

The Cohasset Recreation Department wil accept telephone registrations for skating lessons which will be held at Cohasset Winter Gardens.

The Learn to Skate and USFSA Badge and Program will offer three, six-week sessions for a fee of $24 per session. A discount rate of $20 will be offered to second and subsequent family members who register for the same session. Class time will be one half-hour, and practice time will be one half-hour.

The first session will be held on Saturdays from 5 to 6 greatest 24-hour snowfall was 28.2 inches at Blue Hill on February 24/25, 1969. The greatest single storm was 47 inches at Peru (Massachusetts) on March 2/5, 1947. The greatest monthly snowfall was 78 inches in Monroe February 1893.

September Summary

September was cold and dry. Overall it was a lackluster month with the only event of interest being hurricane Diana which, for a while, posed a threat to New England, but reduced to a tropical storm, it passed 150 miles southeast of Nantucket, on the 15th, beating northeastward over the open ocean.

This eerie storm, which had been sitting off the coast for several days, suddenly veered savagely and went ashore just north of Cape Fear, N.C. at 1:30 a.m. on the 13th.

On the 14th, thunderstorms raced through our area with heavy showers as a cold front passed, followed by a low pressure system on the 15th bringing rain and gusty northeast winds.

Total precipitation for September, at my station in Marshfield, was 2.04 inchest, 1.24 inches below normal. The maximum 24-hour rainfall was .60 inches on the 4th. Rain, .01 inches or more, occurred on 9 days. The total precipitation this year has been 41.96 inches, 10.48 inches above normal. The mean temperature was 59.25 degrees, 4.35 degrees below normal. The average daily maximum reading was 69.8 degrees, while the average daily minimum was 48.6 degrees. The low temperature for the month was 34 degrees on the 18th, with a high reading of 84 degrees on the 25th.

There were five clear days, twenty partly cloudy days, and five cloudy. The average wind speed was 10 MPH; normal is 11.2 MPH. The highest gust was 33 MPH on the 15th.

The normal heating season is from September 1 to May 23. Some 98 percent of the heating year remains.

October Outlook

The period of October 3 through the 8th will be mostly fair, but with the chance of a few showers as fronts pass. From the 9th to 16th it will be unsettled with considerable cloudiness and changeable conditions with some possibly heavy showers indicated. From the 17th to the 23rd high pressure should be predominate with mostly fair weather. The period of the 24th to the 31st should be stormy with major precipitation likely about the 29th to 31st.

Winter Outlook

To have a year, season, or month exactly normal weatherwise would be a rare occurrence. This year, similar to the National Weather Service, I will use defining numerical limits, in percentages, to express confidence of my outlook. The meteorological winter, 1984/85, is very difficult to predict because it appears to be very near normal for the northeast states. December, January, and February, on the whole, will be above average in precipitation with a confidence factor of 55 percent, and above normal in temperature with a confidence factor of 65 percent.

The monthly outlook is as follows: December — 65 percent probability of above normal precipitation and a 60 percent probability of above normal temperature; January — 60 percent probability of below normal precipitation with a 60 percent probability of above normal temperature; February — 55 percent probability of above normal precipitation with a 55 percent probability of below normal temperature.

My 30-day outlooks will be more detailed as ingrained weather trends become apparent, so watch for my article each month.

From the garden — Bring in your summer house plants

By Joan Pinkham

When the swamp maples and sumac are a vivid red, we know that Jack Frost will administer his coup de grace any night and that's it for the vegetables and flowers for yet another year. Just one quick freeze will transform our summer delights into withered brown ruins, but nothing daunted, eternal optimists "think spring" and set about planting bulbs before the ground freezes solid. The tulips and daffodils we look forward to must be planted now, for bulbs must grow roots before they can bloom and need a chill to flower. The chill or cool period must be for at least 10 weeks at 48 degrees. Plant your bulbs where they will get moderate sun. A splendid effect is obtained when they are planted on grassy banks and slopes and for a natural effect, Channel Two's "Victory Garden" program suggested holding three bulbs in your right hand, dropping them on the ground and planting them where they fall. After digging down seven or eight inches, a little bonemeal should be put in the hole before inserting the bulb and covering it.

October almost always has exactly 19 fine days, some of which we call Indian Summer. Germany has an "Old Woman's Summer" and England has "All-hallow Summer," but our so-called "fifth season" follows our first hard frost and delights us with mild autumnm days with clear skies, calm air, distant haze and cool nights. Paul Parent and Larry Mounce agree this was not the best of all growing summers, with too many extremes — either too hot, too wet, or too humid. Mildew and mold brought on by high humidity and damp weather dismayed many when plants literally rotted on the vine. On the other hand, Barbara and Al Cain's tomatoes were a meal unto themselves, weighing in at over a pound each! From Mounce I learned why corn was selling for 25¢ an ear at most roadside stands; most corn stalks yield only one ear and in order to attract customers with a daily supply of this favorite of all summer crops, many farmers have to rent large fields all over town.

Why birds have been boycotting our feeders these last few weeks is a puzzlement to many, so I turned to Bev Litchfield, (birder par excellence), for the answer. Even the squirrels aren't being their usual greedy selves, for they and the chipmunks have an unusually bounteous crop of acorns in the woods this year. The birds are able to feast on berries and insects at this time and are usually found deep in the woods, being very secretive. When the ground freezes and frost destroys seeds and berries, the birds will once again seek out our feeders and as a member of the South Shore Science Center staff, Bev urges taking advantage of their annual seed sale. Sunday, Oct. 7 at 4 p.m. is the deadline for ordering. Call them at that time for seed that will be held for pickup until Oct. 21.

Tardy gardeners who were fooled by the recent mild weather had better be speedy now and bring in their summering house plants, for early frost threatens anytime. Besides, pot plants need a bit of time under the house roof to readjust to life indoors. All sorts of crawling beasties have enjoyed living on them and so always inspect them first to make sure mealybugs, spider mites and aphids don't come in out of the cold, too. An easy way to get rid of them is to give the plants a dunking in a mild pesticide solution.

It always comes as a surprise to me when out-of-towners refer to our South Shore as being part of the Cape, not knowing that one has to cross the Canal before laying claim to being a resident of that charming area. But, living as we do at the gateway to the Cape, a little history of the Cape Cod Canal is perhaps appropriate. It seems that two hundred years ago, men dreamed of a canal, for many lives were lost as well as ships on the long, hazardous voyage around the arm of the Cape, but it was not until 1907 when work began under the direction of William Barclay Parsons, a member of the Panama Canal Commission. It took seven years to build and was first operated as a toll waterway, but that was so costly, shipowners avoided the shorter route and tolls were abolished when the federal government took over the canal ownership in 1926.

The annual fall round-up was held last month — of birds, not cattle. The last count for the district covering the area from Quincy, west to Middleboro and south to Plymouth yielded 170 species, so it was that Warren Harrington and David Clapp were pleased with a count of 100 for their travels from Fourth Cliff, south through Marshfield to the Duxbury marshes. Out on the flats at Humarock they spotted a Hudsonian Godwit, stopping to pause in its migration south. Looking like a large yellow-legs, with a turned up bill, it is a bird 15 1/2" long, quite nondescript. In the Ferry Hill thicket, warblers included knat catchers, kinglets, Wilsons, Cape May, yellow-breasted chat and blue-throated. Further along, at Dwyer's Farm 25 bobolinks were seen and a dick sissel, but the biggest group of birds were spotted at sundown in the tall grasses of the North River by Rte. 3 in Marshfield. Harrington estimates there were 40,000 of the noisy, black migrant grackles roosting there for the night.

Ever dreaming up ways to draw attention to the delights of the consignment shop that keeps the shelves stocked with reading material at the Clift Rodgers Library, Peggy Beals and Lois Geary drew many a chuckle with their latest idea. Pointing the way to the shop on the second floor is a novel planter on the library porch. Serving as a container for the flourishing spider plant is a ski boot someone donated to the cause — different and amusing.

Some call it the Harvest Moon when pumpkins, apples and sheaves of corn are everywhere. The Indians who used to hunt our streams and woodlands with bow and arrow called it the Hunter's Moon. In the month of September, we lose 85 minutes of precious daylight and this month marks the return to standard time. Soon we'll hear the honking of geese and look up to see them migrating in their familiar V pattern. For those who wish to learn more about the mysteries of bird migrations, they may join Warren Harrington as he leads the Brookline Bird Club in a Saturday morning bird walk. The public is invited to join them as they leave the Marshfield Town Hall at 9 a.m. You might see the marble Godwit spotted recently at Duxbury Beach, or the peregrin merlin in the vicinity of Plymouth Airport.

A note from the Minister -

Because we know that there are many people in our country who are in need -- financially, emotionally, spiritually -- our congregation participates each year in the Neighbors In Need offering of the United Church of Christ. That special offering, next month, will help people in need through these programs:

Ministry to forgotten imprisoned women
Ministry to youth and peace through TV
Mission to runaway youth
Aid for ecomomically displaced persons
Tax justice project for the poor
Ministry to American Indians

In the next two weeks you will receive more information about your "Neighbors in Need" and what you can do to help them. Your gift, whatever the amount, will be gladly welcomed as we, the church, work to help our Neighbors in Need.

"The road to hell is paved with butter," could only have been said by someone who loves his baked potato slathered with butter, ear of corn dripping with it and breakfast muffin saturated with gobs of butter. Margarine will never do—the true butter freak isn't fooled when it is substituted, any more than instant coffee will do in place of the aroma of freshly ground coffee beans. Pam Caruso writes of her campaign to improve her family's diet, telling of making what they call "Better Butter." "My Better Butter has 45% less saturated fat, 20% fewer calories and 50% less cholesterol than whole butter. Yet you still get the flavor of butter." Pam uses it for cooking, making a Better Butter Sauce that saves the vitamins and minerals leached out by steaming or boiling her veggies. "I cook the vegetables in only a little water—3/4 c. for 4 c. chopped vegetables. I save the water in a small saucepan, season to taste with garlic powder. With 1T cornstarch, 1T cold water, I make a smooth paste and add to the vegetable broth, heating and stirring until the sauce thickens. Then I add 2 tsp. of Better Butter and stir until it melts into the sauce." Here is how to make

BETTER BUTTER

In a blender or food processor, combine
1/4 pd. room-temp butter with
1/4 c. each of water and vegetable oil. (Pam uses an oil with a light flavor like refined safflower or sunflower oil.)

Mix thoroughly—and that's it.

Even cheese is a "no, no", for those seeking to lower their family's intake of sodium. If you know anyone who has high blood pressure, you're aware that a salt-free diet is suggested. Having to give up cheese would be a supreme sacrifice for most of us, but two ounces of Parmesan contains more salt than two ounces of potato chips. The National Academy of Science suggests that the average, healthy adult can safely consume 1,100 to 3,300 mgs. of sodium a day. Processed cheeses have a lot of sodium: American (817 mgs. in 2 oz.), processed Swiss (783 mgs.), blue cheese (797 mgs.), Muenster (228 mgs.), Monterey Jack (306 mgs.). The common hard cheese lowest in sodium is unpasteurized Swiss (150 mgs.), only 5% of the maximum daily allowance. The smart thing for cheese-lovers to do is buy "natural cheese", rather than processed. Imported cheeses, particularly from Denmark, are the least tainted. An ideal snack food is this

ROQUEFORT VEGETABLE DIP

1 pd. (2 c.) cottage cheese
1/4 c. skim milk
1 tsp. sea salt
1 T chopped chives
1 tomato, chopped
1/2 c. crumbled Roquefort cheese

Puree cottage cheese and milk together in blender or food mill until smooth. Fold in remaining ingredients. Yield: about 2 cups.

So much for dieting and nourishing foods. Good intentions are flung to the winds when faced with this tempting dessert, chock full of calories and cholesterol. B.J. Babcock served it recently and though it may seem expensive to make, it serves at least 10, may be frozen ahead of time and is easy to make.

BANANA SPLIT

Melt 1 stick margarine and add to 2 c. graham cracker crumbs
Spread in 9"x13" pan. Bake at 350 degrees for 8 min.
Beat: 2 sticks margarine
1 c. powdered sugar
1 tsp. vanilla
2 eggs
Blend above layer in blender for 15 min. Add:
1 medium can crushed pineapple, well drained.
Pour over crust. (May be frozen at this point.)
Slice bananas over top before serving and cover with Coolwhip. Chopped nuts on top are optional

Here we have another of Joanne Cure's appetizer recipes, this one for either microwave or conventional ovens and called

HOT TUNA CANAPES

1 6½ oz. can tuna
1/3 c. mayonnaise
1/4 c. chopped green onions
1 clove minced garlic
16 cocktail rye rounds
Paprika
Spanish olives, sliced

Combine first four ingredients and stir to blend. Spoon heaping tsp. onto each rye round; sprinkle with paprika and top with olive slice. Place rye rounds on microwave grill pan and cook on High for 2½ to 3 min. In conventional oven bake at 350 for 10 min. Makes 16 rounds.

☐ Old politicians never die; they just run once too often. Elliot Richardson lost a lot of votes when he criticized the Republican platform. He should have known that a political platform is just like the one on the back of a trolley — not meant to stand on, just to get on.

☐ In his acceptance speech Ray Shamie said his election meant the Republican party of Massachusetts is off to a new start. That's right, Ray -a new start in the wrong direction.

☐ A chorus girl is a person who never worries about getting ahead because she doesn't need one.

☐ A co-ed is a girl who goes to college. The first co-educational institution, incidentally, was the Garden of Eden.

☐ A childish game is one at which your wife beats you. Bobbie always beats me at Spill 'n Spell. It's such a childish game.

☐ We hear too much talk these days about conservatives. A conservative is a person who is too cowardly to fight and too fat to run.

☐ Courtship has been defined as the period during which the girl decides whether or not she can do any better.

☐ For rent: 3-room apartment. No drinking children or pets.

Reflections on a shared (en) counter

By Lois Martin

It was about two years ago in Maine. We were having breakfast somehere near Portland and because the tables were filled, I sat at the counter.

I perched beside a man who was quietly having two eggs over easy. The coffee shop was abustle with its morning busyness. Within moments it was obvious that man and I held a different view of the day.

For me it was a weekend away at Portland's big balloon festival, fun.

For him, it was another day with breakfast out alone as he accommodated a lingering grief.

PATCHES

You know how it is. Strangers who sit in safe places, who look like what they probably are, they start talking. There's that phenomenon.

For whatever reason strangers confide sometimes where friends do not.

Besides it would be highly unusual for me to eat English muffins next to someone with whom I had not exchanged at least a nod. So it was that as I mulled the menu I absentmindedly asked my counter colleague for a recommendation. I knew he was 'from there.' He knew I wasn't.

So he gave me a rundown on the breakfast fare, adding he ate there every morning. I said that certainly was a sound endorsement . . . and he started out telling me why he was there.

His wife, he said, had not had heart to get up and carry on the day for more than a year. They had several children, raised them. And then about 15 months before that, their youngest had dropped dead while playing basketball with his brother. He was 19 years old.

They had delighted in that son. The youngest to what had grown to be older parents, the youth had been the one on whom the sun rose and set. He hadn't grown away from home yet. He was the one who kidded his mother in the kitchen, lifting her off her feet as she stirred the sauce. She'd denounce the flamboyant action of her son, loving every minute of it.

He'd been the one out shoveling, telling his father he'd taken over that chore and to stay inside and provide sidewalk superintendency through the living room window.

He'd gone to school, learned his trade, been cited as the winner of the sportsmanship award, patted on the back by his elders in the community as "a fine young man."

His parents had basked in the warmth of his very existence. And without that warmth they struggled to find reason for their own existences. For 15 months reasons had failed to exist.

So every morning, after she apologized for not being herself yet and unable to get up to share the day's beginnings, he'd go out for breakfast.

It had been the boy's heart, the doctor's said. Nothing too clear in origin. Nothing that made anyone feel better.

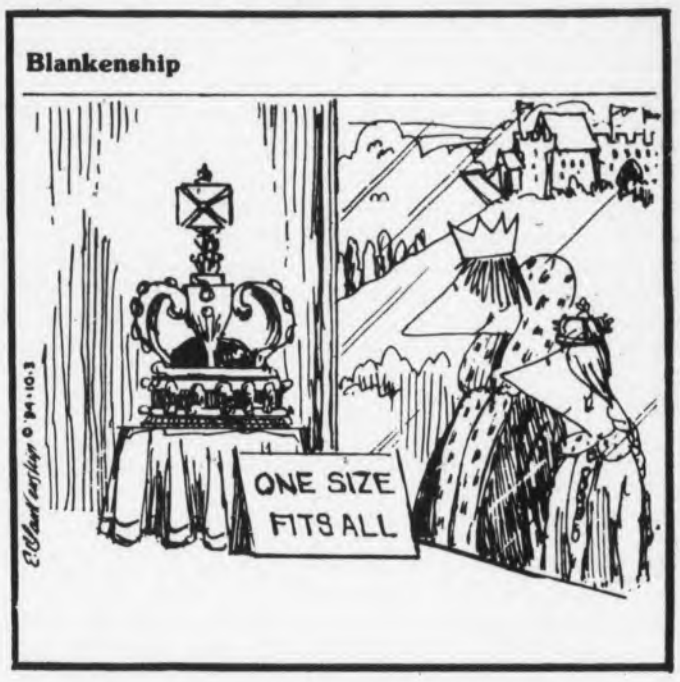
The man was retired. There was no great cause in his day for adhering to a list of contrived chores. He and his wife didn't talk anymore about their new way of life, or rather the loss of it in them individually and collectively.

The waitress had asked me for my order in the midst of what had grown to be a personal conversation by two people who now knew a circumstance of shared sadness. But the muffin sat untouched.

I told him how utterly terrible it was that his dear son had died, that nothing would alter the reality that they had been stripped of a prime source of love in their daily lives.

Then I asked him what he thought his son left his parents. If not material gain, then what. And what would he have wanted them to be doing now.

He answered each question as earnestly as it was posed. There had not been a scrap of small talk after our mutual "Good morning."



We talked more about legacy, finding one where there feels like none. And I sent through him a message to his wife. Would he for me, I asked, give her that message and my love. He would.

Later that morning I wondered. Perhaps this intimate repartee repeated to a grieving woman from a stranger would only add to their pain.

But in the afternoon sun as balloons prepared to launch, I was told 'my friend' was there. With him was his wife. These two brave people had done something they hadn't done for more than a year, taken a ride with a warm purpose on a Sunday afternoon.

They were valiant in their effort to find new meaning in the wake of a painful loss.

Months later he wrote to me, my breakfast companion. They were doing well. And now and then I think of them, that rare privilege at a coffee counter. They are a tribute to their son.

State Police barracks in Norwell are busy

By Mike Berger

It's only fitting that the speed limit sign telling motorists to decrease speed from 40 to 25 miles per hour on Rte. 123 in Norwell Center is located near the State Police barracks.

A State Police Headquarters official in Boston called the Norwell station the second busiest station in eastern Massachusetts.

Barracks Commander Sgt. John Freeman won't deny that.

Motor vehicles. That's the key phrase for Norwell barracks.

Patrolling from the Boston-Milton line (Keystone Building on the Southeast Expressway), north to the Rte. 128 Ponkapoag, Houghton's Pond exit to the Howard Johnson's motel in Kingston, the Norwell station has a huge geographic area to patrol.

And if you're stranded on Rte 3, you're bound to meet one of the 23 officers which are stationed in Norwell.

These officers monitor speeding, motor vehicle violations, out-of-gas and disabled vehicles as well as man the Southeast Expressway Reconstruction Project on a special detail.

When a car is disabled or out of gas, the trooper will ask the motorist if a specific gas station will be called or if an area tow truck should be called. Unless another emergency develops, the trooper will stay with the motorist until the tow truck arrives.

Recent new developments from the Norwell as well as other State Police barracks include a stepped up patrol of homosexual activity in state rest areas as well as monitoring speeders with unmarked cars.

"People don't expect to see us. There is no identification on the car but it is equipped with blue lights and a siren and an officer who is in complete uniform," said Freeman.

The troopers also assist local police with investigations of more serious crimes such as larcenies, stabbings, and armed robberies.

There is also a drug investigation unit which is connected and works closely with the district attorney's office.

The Norwell barracks is located right in the heart of Norwell center and eight minutes from the Rte.3 exit in Assinippi Corner.

Freeman, a 16-year veteran, says there was talk of moving the Norwell station ever since he joined the force "and they're still talking about it."

"There's the possibility of moving us to Braintree, on state land on Rte. 53 in Hanover but there's nothing concrete. I'd say we're way down on the priority list."

The state owns the barracks building and how it was located in Norwell is quite a history story.

In 1919, poultry stealing became a serious matter in the Norwell area. Those whose business was raising poultry asked for more enforcement in Norwell.

A station was opened in a former Arts and Crafts and post office building.

After several months the force then was increased to five men and residents felt relieved that a "strong arm of protection was at hand."

The permanence of Norwell Center as the headquarters of D Troop, Station I, Massachusetts State Patrol was made possible through the joint cooperation of town officials, the public and state public safety officials.

The use of the old "pound" lot at the corner of Main and Central Streets was approved by selectmen. A well was dug by volunteer labor and a temporary building which housed the troop stood from 1923 to 1935.

The state then built six large modern sub-stations and constructed one of them in Norwell.

An area history book said, "A move to place the station on the state road in North Pembroke was strongly supported in some quarters but Norwell officials, strongly aided by Representative Ernest Sparrell succeeded in having the new station built in Norwell."

Twenty-three officers including two women are stationed out of the Norwell barracks.

The officers work 8½ hours per day with a four days on, two days off shift. There are cruisers out 24 hours per day, mainly on the state highways.

Most of the officers live within a ten-mile radius of the Norwell station and the average age of the officers is about 33 years old. Most of the officers are married.

To become a state trooper, a general knowledge test must be taken and passed. New troopers must be between 19 and 30 years old. New applicants must pass a series of physical and agility tests.

Those who pass are put on a waiting list and then background and security tests are examined. When an applicant is called, he must then pass a 20-week academy program.

The applicant then is assigned to a substation with a three-month probation period with a senior officer.

When the applicant graduates from the academy, the starting pay is $329 weekly.

Sgt. Freeman says there is a friendly spirit of cooperation between Norwell and State Police. They often pass each other on the roads. In fact both stations are located within a quarter of a mile of each other.

"We're here to help the public and other police departments," said Freeman.

Council for Children invites new members

The Coastline Council for Children invites citizens living in Braintree, Cohasset, Hingham, Hull, Norwell, Scituate, and Weymouth to become part of the citizen advocacy network making vital decisions on children's services in these communities.

The Council, along with forty other councils throughout the state, serves as the citizen arm of the Commonwealth's Office for Children.

As Council members, citizens have the legislative mandate to determine children's needs of services, review proposals submitted for public funding and monitor children's programs. In addition, citizens work on children's issues in response to community needs.

All that is needed to become part of this network is the desire to work on behalf of children and the willingness to give two to four hours a month. Training and assistance are provided by the Community Representative. For more information, call The Coastline Council for Children, 849-1882.

Attention State Senate candidates

For the Oct. 10 issue of the Mariner, we address the following question to State Senate candidates William Golden and Anna Doherty.

What expectations, if any, should South Shore residents have for improvement in transportation within the next five years and what is it likely to be?

(Responding candidates are asked to return their answers to the Mariner office by Monday noon. We also thank them for their view on behalf of voters.)

Nursing home could create 165-180 jobs

erational program with elementary school children in the area, another idea that has been used successfully in some of the group's other facilities.

Hingham architect David Dunlap has designed a brick-faced two story building with sloping roofs that would take advantage of the location to overlook the water. "People always say you can tell an institution by the flat roofs. With this design, it doesn't look institutional and there's room under the rafters to put in the heating and air conditioning units, which will also save on energy costs," Dunlap said.

According to the determination of need document filed, the per-bed cost at Waterford is $41,463. And Ferencik quoted figures from a recent statewide report that shows a shortage of 4,000 nursing home beds in Massachusetts alone. Another national report, he said, estimates the need, by the year 2000, for 1.3 million more nursing home beds across the nation.

Waterford will offer Level I, II and III care. Levels I and II are skilled nursing care, which will provide such services as intravenous and nasal-gastric feedings. Level III is a more custodial type of care for the patient who requires less skilled nursing. Ferencik said the average age of patients at Waterford facilities is 84 and their average stay three to four years.

Ferencik said he anticipated about 50 percent of the patients at Waterford would be Medicaid patients.

Included in the Waterford application were letters of support from South Shore Elder Services in Cohasset and the Hingham Visiting Nurse Association. Along with the usual nursing home services, a daycare program for the ambulatory elderly will be offered as well, with the facility providing a van between Waterford and the daycare client's home. The daycare program will include structured activities, physical or recreational therapy and a noon meal.

The property is presently zoned for one-acre residential development. The Cohasset Zoning Board of Appeals will, at a date to be set, hear Waterford's application for a special permit for the project. And the developers are also expected to meet with the Hingham Planning Board to discuss traffic concerns.

Civil Rights suit filed

A Norwell attorney has filed a Civil Rights case on behalf of Hingham resident and former supervisor of Wompatuck State park, John Hart. The suit asks $1-million in damages and court costs from each of six defendants and asks that all other legal action cease until this case is resolved.

Atty. A. Russell Lucid said yesterday that the case was filed on Sept. 28 in U.S. District Court. He said five other persons, against whom job action was taken, may become parties to the suit.

The suit charges that: Gilbert Bliss, director of Forests and Parks for the Department of Environmental Management: Gordon Graham, a DEM lawyer, and others conspired to remove Hart from Wompatuck State park and manipulated the state inspector general's office to exceed the scope of its authority.

Named in the suit are: Bliss; Graham; Manuel Roderick, region 1 supervisor for DEM; James Gutensohn, DEM commissioner; Joseph Barressi, state inspector general, and Douglas Wells, an investigator for the Inspector General's office.

The suit charges that the conspiracy and exceeding of the inspector general's authority deprived Hart of his Civil Rights.

The suit asks that further job action be stopped, that the Commonwealth be enjoined from evicting Hart from his 103 Union St., Hingham, home and that damages be assessed against the individuals named in the suit.

Mondale Party

John and Olivia Linsley will host an America for Mondale-Ferraro party Oct. 7 at 63 Nichols Rd., Cohasset to help raise money for the Democratic campaign this fall.

The party is part of the America for Mondale-Ferraro national grass roots fundraising program. Twenty thousand parties are being planned across the country for the night of Oct. 7 to raise an estimated $5 million for Democratic candidates, including Walter F. Mondale and Geraldine A. Ferraro.

Town orders trucks off land

After a motion to dismiss the case was denied last month, the town has proceeded with an order for Litchfield Express Co. to vacate land used to store its commercial vehicles on Bayberry Lane.

If Barron Salvador Jr., owner of the express company, fails to comply with the order, the town will petition Quincy District Court to repossess the land.

February 15, the Board of Selectmen voted to revoke any previous right to the town-owned land, and ordered all trucks removed from the premises within 90 days.

The Salvadors then proceeded with a civil court suit against selectmen. The complaint sought to have the court annul the board's previous decision.

The town consequently made several motions to the court, stating that the Salvadors should initially be presenting their case to the Cohasset Zoning Board of Appeals. The Norfolk County Superior Court refused the town's motion to dismiss the case last month, and the town has since appealed that verdict.

Notice of the town's impending action to repossess the property was sent October 1 to the Litchfield Express owners. According to Town Counsel Richard Henderson, the town's motion for a summary process action should result in a quick recovery of the property to the town.

Salvador, who has used the land adjacent to the his home at 30 Bayberry Lane to store company trucks for the past 15 years, was on vacation early this week. His attorney, Joseph D'Agostino of Marshfield, is also on vacation until October 15.

Salvador's son, Mark, said his parents were notified of the town's impending court action, but Litchfield Express is continuing "business as usual." There are no immediate plans to vacate the land, until the matter is discussed with their attorney, Mark added.

In addition to the possibility of the town filing a summary process action to regain possession of the land, the Cohasset Building Inspector, as the town's zoning enforcement officer, is also expected to file a court action against Litchfield Express Co.

The separate complaint, to be filed by Building Inspector Edward Poskus in Norfolk County Superior Court, requests that even after the town regains the land, the Salvadors be found in violation of the town's zoning bylaw. The bylaw states that not more than one commercial vehicle be stored in a residential neighborhood.

Currently, the Salvadors park several trucks on the lot adjacent to their home. Last winter, the town ordered the Salvadors to vacate the land used to park Litchfield Express trucks, saying the town-owned land was illegally used by a private business.

The Salvadors claim they are using using the land based on a verbal agreement made in 1969 by a former Board of Selectmen. The owners contend at that time, selectmen agreed the land was unbuildable, and agreed the Salvadors could use the parcel to park their commercial trucks.

Again in 1974, selectmen reiterated their approval for the use of the property by the Salvadors. But the issue flared a year ago when the former Building Inspector cited the Salvadors for a zoning violation.

The October 1 notice states, "your continued use of this land on and after ten days from the date of the receipt of this notice will constitute trespass and leave the town no alternative but to seek repossession of Parcel 25."

The language & culture of Spain in Cohasset

By Jane Lane

Their small faces squirm with the anticipation of discovery - of speaking new words, of learning new meanings.

As their instructor hovers closely above this small group, they willingly echo his unfamiliar words, then privately smile at their accomplishment.

These ten youngsters are students at the Cohasset Community Center's afterschool Spanish program taught by Ronald Riley of Weymouth. This teacher intends to instruct these eager youngsters, and instill an excitement brought about by a new experience.

Unlike many high school or college classrooms where foreign language is a requirement frowned upon with disdain, this is a joyous experience shared by students thirsting for more.

Riley quickly acknowledges the differences between the two classroom environments. "It's exactly opposite," he explains. "The students are here because that is where they choose to be. It's entirely different from the class where everyone is required to be there. These kids really want to learn. They enjoy it. That makes me enjoy teaching much more."

Another great difference is quickly apparent. His Cohasset students range in age from five to 12, from kindergarten students to seveth graders. Some of his students have problems forming the letters of the alphabet, nevermind relating the time in Spanish.

But that does not sway Riley from an unequivocal enjoyment of this class. In fact, he loves teaching these youngsters.

"This is absolutely the best time to learn a foreign language. These children don't have the prejudices about language and cultures that we have as we grow older. They are willing to accept what they hear. And, they have a wonderful ability to grasp what they hear

Tax bills to be mailed in two weeks

Tax bills will be mailed by the end of this month, according to Assessor Chairman Brian Wilkin.

And until revenue is forthcoming from those delayed bills, the town will have to borrow $1 million to be paid in full by December 10.

The bills were scheduled to be sent to Cohasset taxpayers by the first of October. But according to Wilkin, 300 applications for tax abatements, a lack of clerical help, and sporadic use of the town's computer terminal, added up to the three or four week delay.

The information, including all new construction, which will comprise the town's revised tax base, has been sent to the state for its approval. The assessors expect that approval within a week. Following that, Wilkin told selectmen this week, the town should complete its market trend survey and tax bills will be finalized "very shortly."

He expects residents will receive their tax bills within two weeks.

Acting Treasurer-Collector Betty Ripley notified selectmen that the town will be borrowing $1 million in anticipation of tax revenue. It is expected that tax monies will begin flowing into the town coffers sometime in early to mid November, depending on the date tax bills are mailed.

If that schedule is met, the town will be able to pay the loan by the December 10 deadline and will have enough revenue to continue operations.

According to Ripley's calculations, it will cost the town about $9000 in interest to complete the two-month loan transaction.

Although assessors told selectmen last month that bills should be prepared by the first of October, he said there were unanticipated problems that caused the three or four-week delay. There was a shortage of clerical help in the office, Wilkin explained, addding that some type of permanent coverage in that office would help in compiling the bills, and in assisting the public during regular office hours.

He also noted that a computer terminal was not always available for the assessor's use, delaying the final analysis even further.

A large number of applications for 1983 tax abatements had to be reviewed and several appeal hearings were scheduled, he added. The procedure took a great length of time, because many people did not anticipate such a jump in last year's bills. Last year's taxes included the town's first revaluation in ten years, Wilkin explained.

Selectmen, distressed that the bills will be mailed even later than estimated last month, questioned the reason for the delay. Frank England concluded by telling Wilkin and the Board of Assessors , "at budget time, you figure out what kind of help you need in that office and we'll see what we can do."

Wilkin explained that the next tax bills will be sent in September, 1985. England added, "stick in the clerical help you need and we'll discuss at budget time. Let's not wait until tax time to talk about this again."

Town Hall public meeting

The Town Hall Study Committee will be presenting three alternative projects to the public tonight at 7:30.

At the Town Hall auditorium, the committee will present three alternatives which they contend will provide adequate office space for Town Hall employees. After each project is presented, the public is invited to comment on the plans.

There was a strong outcry against a previous proposal to reconstruct the Town Hall auditorium by eliminating the stage. Since that time, more tempered suggestions have been to renovate the auditorium, construct extra office space in the rear of the building, and leave the stage in its present location.

Cohasset's week . . .

Committee members search

The town is currently in need of residents to serve on several municipal committees and boards. Anyone interested in participating on one of the following committees, may contact the selectmen's acting Executive Secretary or a selectman.

Because of the resignation of Burk Ketcham, there is a vacancy on the Straits Pond Management Committee and the Mass Coastal Zone Management's Regional Community Advisory Committee. There are also three vacancies on the Town Hall Study Committee.

There are three vacancies on the Government Structure Committee. Anyone interested in becoming a member of that advisory group should contact Town Moderator William Weeks.

There is a vacancy on the Drainage Advisory Committee. The Conservation Commission is seeking a new member, preferably an attorney. Any interested residents may contact Commission Chairman Merl Brown.

There is also one vacancy on the Zoning Board of Appeals.

Executive secretary search

Selectmen received 38 applications for the position of Cohasset Executive Secretary.

The post has been filled for several weeks by Acting Executive Secretary Janet Chalke, when the position was vacated by former secretary Mark Lanza. Chalke did not apply for the permanent position.

During their meeting this week, selectmen reviewed the list and credentials of each applicant. By process of elimination, they narrowed the final list of candidates to nine.

Feeling that number would result in too many interviews, the board members will individually attempt to prioritize the candidates and narrow the field down to six.

The final six applicants will be scheduled for interviews during the next few weeks.

Watershed meeting

Selectmen, water commissioners and members of the Watershed Protection District Advisory Committee were scheduled to meet last night to review engineering proposals to form the Watershed Protection District bylaw.

S.E.A. and Camp, Dresser and McKee were to conduct formal presentations to the committee members. A brief question and answer period was to follow the separate presentations

The watershed advisory committee voted 6-3 last week to recommend the firm of S.E.A. to conduct the indepth engineering study and to compose the proposed watershed bylaw. According to the committee, S.E.A. has had considerable experience in framing such bylaws, including a model which is used throughout the state that was devised for the town of Hanover.

Meanwhile, the town is still awaiting a draft by the Town Counsel's office which would be used as a temporary moratorium, banning any construction within the proposed watershed area. There are plans currently before the planning board, requesting approval to build within that watershed district.

Lead paint ban

At the Cohasset Board of Health meeting Oct. 1, the Board voted to ban the disposal of commercially generated lead paint residue in the municipal landfill. The residues are generated when old paint is removed from a building prior to painting or staining.

The ban will stay in effect until a determination is made by the Department of Public Health and/or the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering regarding any ill effects of lead paint deposition in landfills on the environment and the public health.

Since lead based paints were collected as a hazardous material in the recent Hazardous Materials Collection Day in Cohasset, the Board felt it necessary to ban lead paint residues from the municipal landfill.

Pipe damage

A crew from Eastern Pipe televised the sewer lines along the Margin Street area last month and located two areas of damaged pipe that will require replacement.

According to Sewer Commission Chairman Charles DeSantis, the two pipes were located in the areas included in the recent water main reconstruction project.

A full assessment of the inspection was sent to the Water Department by the sewer commission. According to DeSantis, the commission will now request a meeting between the Water Commission, its engineers and project contractor and the Sewer Department's chief operator and chairman. They will discuss the repair of the damaged sections and payment to Eastern Pipe.

Support of ban

The Board of Health voted unanimously to support the Water Department's request that a moratorium be placed on any new develooment within the perameter of the Watershed Line Area (Lily Pond).

The Board of Health stated it shared the same concerns outlined by the Water Department regarding the protection of potable water for future generations of the town.

Thinking about war

A world beyond war? A recent Stanford University poll revealed that 75% of American teenagers expect to die in a nuclear war.

To many, young and old, war seems inevitable, and nuclear war impossible to prevent. Is war inevitable? How can we build a world without war?

If these questions trouble you, we hope you'll attend the Beyond War presentation to be held Thursday, Oct. 18, at 7:30 p.m. at the Second Congregational Church (next to Cohasset Town Hall).

In 1946, Albert Einstein wrote, "The unleashed power of the atom has changed everything save our modes of thinking, and we thus drift toward unparalleled catastrophe." Attend the Beyond War presentation to hear some positive ideas about changing "our modes of thinking" about war.

Committee vacancies

There are currently three vacancies on the Town Government Structure Committee.

Zoning Board of Appeals renders decisions

The Zoning Board of Appeals has denied an application for a special permit to construct a single-family home on Jerusalem Road.

The request for the special permit was made by Waterfront Realty Trust for the construction of a residence by Donald Staszko on land known as the Sanbro lot.

Originally, Staszko's request to build a residence on the lot was denied by the Building Inspector. The Zoning Board of Appeals also denied an appeal of that decision, stating the home would be located within the floodplain and watershed district.

Staszko then applied for a special permit to construct the home within the floodplain and watershed area. The zoning board denied the special permit Sept. 28.

During the hearing, opponents of Staszko's application presented a "Memorandum of Pleasant Beach Associates on Opposition to Appeal and Application for Special Permit by Waterfront Realty Trust" which contained several documents.

The board also received a letter dated July 2 from William Richardson, who participated in the preparation of the Cohasset Floodplain and Watershed Protection District map, opposing the application.

Several Cohasset residents and neighbors testified that the location has repeatedly been overtopped by waves, and that the detention area behind the dunes retains standing water.

The board also received correspondence from the planning board, opposing the application.

According to the zoning board, the proposed construction is located within the floodplain and watershed area. Portions of the location upon which house construction, grading, and landscaping and the sceptic system are proposed, are subject to flooding and wave damage.

The wave runup projections and preliminary flood insurance study estimates of 100-year flood elevations which were submitted by Staszko, are theoretical and are not supported by either the physical evidence presented or the testimony of residents who observed the site during recent storms, board members determined.

In its decision last month, the zoning board stated that Staszko failed to affirm that the land is not subject to flooding or wave damage, or that it is ten feet above mean sea level. The applicant also failed to show that the proposed construction will not obstruct or divert flood flow and that the proposed drainage system will not cause pollution or otherwise endanger property or the public health.

The zoning board concluded that the applicant also failed to prove that the proposed use of the property does not derogate substantially from the purposed of the floodplain and watershed protection district.

The zoning board granted an application for a special permit filed by Joseph Hayes of H and W Industries.

Hayes requested the use of a trailer for temporary stroage and office space for one year. His business, H and W Industries, is a tenant of Webb-Norfolk Conveyor and will be unable to rent additional space until 1985.

The Planning Board and Board of Health had no objections to the temporary storage facility. The trailer would be placed on the 44-acre parcel and would not be visible from the lot line or from Route 3A. The structure, the zoning board determined, would create no traffic or pollution problems and would be compatible with the existing structures.

With the addition of several conditions, the zoning board of appeals granted a special permit to Country Associates Trust of Waltham, allowing them to proceed with plans to renovate a Beechwood Road residence to five condominiums.

Norman Kaufman of Country Associates Trust of Waltham presented plans to the board, detailing the renovations to the vacant building, once known as Harmony Hill, a summer camp for mentally retarded youths.

According to the zoning board, the applicant has two purchase and sales agreements on two separate lots, Lot 9A and B under the name of Country Associates and Lot 8A and B under the name of Pecunian Realty Trust.

Immediate neighbors offered support of the proposed renovations, stating it would be an improvement to the rundown, vandalized property.

and retain it. Everyone should study languages at such a young age," he advises.

Although this is a new course offering at the community center, its popularity has encouraged Riley to add a French class to the winter semester. He would like to limit both classes to ten students, a number he feels is most beneficial to student and instructor.

Riley, who is a French and Spanish teacher at Easton Junior High School, was encouraged to teach in Cohasset by a persuasive Judy Volungis. A board member of the community center, Judy's son was a student of Riley's during the summer.

He was a member of the Collegate program, an enrichment project for academically gifted students who were recommended by techers to participate. Judy's son was so impressed with Riley, she asked him to participate in the community center's curriculum for the fall.

"Languages are so important today. It's also something the school can't offer these young students. Because of Prop. 2 1/2, we can't afford to offer it as part of our elementary curriculum. The community center saw this as part of another form of enrichment," she states. "I was so impressed with Mr. Riley this summer, and my son enjoyed the program so much, I asked him to join the staff at the community center. I think it is very important for all children to be exposed to a second language."

The course is offered for one hour every Tuesday from 4:30 to 5:30. Although Riley is stressing basic conversational skills, he is also flavoring much of the course with the culture of Spain. He sees language knowledge coinciding with the awareness he brings to students of the tradition and cultures of Spain.

He will be showing slides of the country, preparing Spanish foods, and bringing in a Pinata for a gala Fiesta at the semester's conclusion.

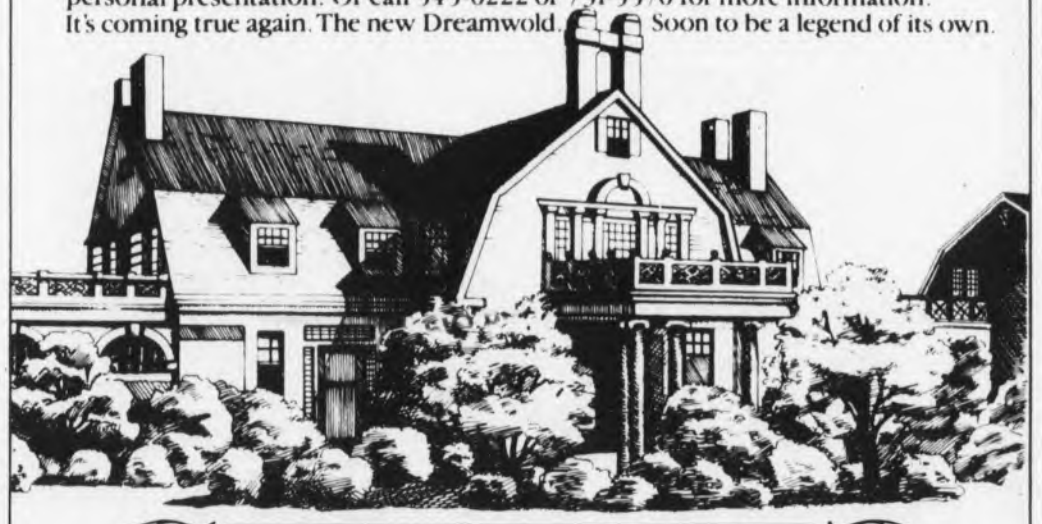
Once upon a time, not so far away,
a brave Copper King built an enchanted kingdom in a land by the sea.

There in Scituate, he surrounded his mansion with idyllic pastures and formal gardens. Then built a fairy tale tower to watch over his dream.

Some said he was eccentric. Others said he was vain. But in truth, the legendary millionaire, Thomas Lawson, was building a beautiful haven as a gift for his beloved family. And in 1903, Dreamwold came true.



Now it's coming true again.

All the majesty, privacy and splendor that was Dreamwold. In twenty-six unique Victorian condominium residences encircling a spectacular rose garden and beautiful swimming pool.

Halloween dance

The Cohasset Community Center will hold a Halloween Dance for adults on Saturday, Oct. 27.

The Center's annual February Dance has been such a success, that many of the several hundred couples that attend that event have requested a second dance be held. We hope that another annual gathering may begin with this costume ball at St. Stephen's Hall, from 8 p.m. to 12 a.m.

Come equipped with a clever costume, or a clever excuse, and be prepared for an evening to dance and socialize with the friends that we don't see often enough.

Tickets are $5 per person, and are available at the Community Center, 9 a.m. to 1 p.m., weekdays, or from members of the Board of Directors. Please purchase tickets in advance, as the hall holds a limited number.

Flea Market

The Beechwood Church Sunday School will hold a flea market/rummage sale Saturday, Oct. 13, from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., at the Beechwood Congregational Church, Church St. Some of the items to be sold: books, typewriter, handmade mallard ducks, furniture, clothing, toys, games, etc. Snack bar available.

Mondale party

Close to 100 local area Democrats from Cohasset and Scituate attended an "America for Mondale-Ferraro" party Sunday night, October 7, at the home of John and Olivia Linsley, 63 Nichols Road, Cohasset.

The event, which centered around the nationally televised debate between Walter Mondale and Ronald Reagan, raised approximately $1,000 for local activities on behalf of the Mondale-Ferraro campaign and the entire Democratic ticket.

"The debate should give a big boost to the Mondale-Ferraro campaign," said Cohasset Democratic Town Committee Chair Donna McGee. "Mondale was strong, and clearly articulated many of the reasons he should be elected President."

"This party, and the 20,000 others held across the country at the same time, will help build the momentum for the Mondale-Ferraro campaign to win in November," said Scituate Democratic Town Committe Chair Joan Hefner.

Those wishing to volunteer for the Mondale-Ferraro campaign should contact McGee at 383-9114 or Hefner at 545-1593.

☐This is the week that all of the High School looks forward to every year. Homecoming. Saturday is the big day, a day that the Senior Class has worked hard to make a success. Friday begins the weekend with a rally, put on by the cheerleaders (who have been practicing very hard to make it extra special). Saturday is the big football game, CHS vs. Holbrook. During halftime, there is to be the announcement of the homecoming queen. The four finalists are: Tracey Fitzpatrick, Ingrid Anderson, Lauren Haynes and Alise Palimeri. The king has already been chosen — Jay Contis. So, it will be Jay and one of the girls that has been voted by the class that will preside over the dance Saturday night. As that schedule shows, the seniors have done their work! The Gridiron Club, who sponsors the day, supplies the cars and prizes for the girls and crowns the queen. They have been hard at work also, doing their part to make the day as nice as can be. Your job is easy! Go to the game, support your team and your candidate, and have a great time doing both!

☐Happy birthday to Fran Marks.

☐Congratulations to Mary Anne Bailey-Hansen, R.N., on her recent appointment as the new community health nurse. She is working at the Social Service League and will be available for "Walk-In" free office hours on Monday, Wednesday and Friday from 8:30 to 9:30 a.m. and 12:30 to 1:30 p.m. for blood pressure screening, urine testing, TB testing and general health consultation. She also makes home visits on those days between 10 a.m. and noon. If you can use Mary Anne's services call the Social Service League office between 8:30 a.m. and 3 p.m. at 383-0771. And, you can be sure of another thing — she certainly will brighten up your day with that sunny smile and pleasant way about her!

☐Penny Paton is having a super year at Wheaton College...the college is celebrating its 150th year, and all of the celebrities have been or will be there to take part in the different festivities. Penny is a celebrity in her own right. She has been a member of the Wheatones chorus group, and has been since she tried out in her freshman year. The group records, and has performed several different places, including Fanueil Hall and Mt. Snow. Penny has been singing since her "Derby Days," and it surely has paid off. She loves her spot on the Wheatones.

☐An update on a few CHS grads of the past: Alexandra Mullen, Class of 1980, has graduated from St. John's College in Annapolis with honors and is at Columbia University where she was awarded the English Department's highest award, a three-year fellowship with a teaching assistantship her second and third year toward her Ph.D. A grand achievement, and we are sure to hear more from Alexandra!

☐Another CHS grad, Katee McArthur, is onward again! She is now at Tufts, at the Dental School program. That is one busy gal!

☐Joanne Fichtner and her husband, Herman, have a surprise for you at the next football game..but they insist that they have a good crowd there, before they let the cheerleaders use them (nitty blue footballs that Herm painted with 1984, to be thrown after each touchdown). Go and catch your own pass, courtesy of the Fichtners.

☐There is a basketball clinic being planned, beginning Oct 26., for girls and boys, grades 4 through 6. It will be held at the Deer Hill School, and taught by Ted Carroll and his able assistants. To register, call the Recreation Department at 383-6791. Enrollment is limited.

☐ Dave Barcomb who quarterbacked last year's CHS football team and was captain of the basketball team, is having quite a year w/the Williston Academy football team.

Williston is 3 and 0, having defeated Vermont Academy, Canterbury, and Westminster. Dave has completed 30 of 43 passes, including four touchdown passes.

This week against Westminster, he threw two T.D. passes and scored another, leading his team to a 20-14 victory.

In addition to playing quarterback, Dave plays free safety on defense and returns kick-offs and punts.

☐Joyce Curran, 13 Church St., was one of 267 new students who enrolled at Ripon College for its 122 academic year.

Ripon College, located in East-Central Wisconsin, is a traditional four-year liberal arts and sciences college. It is nationally recognized for academic excellence.

☐That is the news for this week. Don't forget to call with your family "story." It makes everyone happy — the one who reads it and the one who it is about! Call.

This is a preliminary list of the warrant articles which will appear in the November 19 Special Town Meeting warrant.

At their meeting Monday night, selectmen reviewed the list of 17 proposed articles, and decided to allow most of them. They eliminated a few that they determined could wait until the annual Town Meeting in the spring.

The most important issue which wil be discussed at the special meeting is the SEMASS trash-to-energy proposal.

Among the other items voters will review at the fall Town Meeting are:

to appropriate $2000 to sponsor another Household Hazardous Waste Collection Day in the spring.

to appropriate $1965 for the purchase of a computer terminal in the Town Clerk's office.

to appropriate $5612 to renovate the computer room in the Town Accountant's office, the treasurer-collector's office, town clerk's office and the selectmen's office.

to raise $25,000 for engineering services (Planning Board article).

to appropriate $1100 to purchase additional equipment for the Sewer Department truck.

to appropriate $225,000 to successfully complete the restoration of the school roofs (School Committee article).

to appropriate $4531 for unpaid bills.

to appropriate $6500 for the purchase of an ultrasonic influent flow meter for the Cohasset Wastewater Treatment Plant.

to pay $4080 for Chief Martin Dooley's legal fees.

to accept the Lindquist land gift.

to accept the Lanata easement (Water Commission article).

The advisory committee must review the list of warrant articles and make its recommendations prior to the Nov. 19 meeting. Selectmen will also make recommendations before the Special Town Meeting.

For a moratorium

The building business is booming in Cohasset. Ask the planning board, the building inspector, or the zoning board. Condos, homes and commercial businesses are anxious to locate here.

We welcome new people and businesses to our community. But before construction is even anticipated, warning must be given that Cohasset will protect its beauty, serenity, its open lands, and its natural resources at all costs.

Cohasset has long lived with the reputation of being snobbish, an upstart hamlet which has chosen to ostrasize itself from more plebian communities. Well, maybe that was truth generations ago, but today Cohasset is coming to grips with problems it chooses not to ignore any longer.

This determined upstart has taken on the federal and state governments as no other town has done. With Big Brother panting down our back, we have not succumbed to fines and court actions, and we have stayed in the fight. We believe we are correct, and town meeting has stated firmly that we will finish our race no matter what opponents we must confront.

Businesses have long been attracted to our commercial belt known as Route 3A. This stretch of business-zoned property is filling up quickly as developers scramble before planning and zoning boards for necessary building permits and approval.

Our municipal boards have been working in earnest to ensure that these new developments will be in harmony with our existing structures. Some see these time-consuming measures as attempts to halt any further encroachment upon our open land. Others view them as honest, sincere efforts to preserve the best of Cohasset while allowing necessary, limited amounts of expansion into our town.

One of the most serious problems which will affect our future growth and our current way of life, is the residential developments planned within the perimeters of our watershed district. Although this area has not yet been formally adopted into a restrictive, all-encompassing bylaw, it is in the first stages of development.

An engineering firm will probably be selected this week to begin a comprehensive study of the area and to construct a bylaw which will be legally defensible.

That will take at least a year to complete. In the meantime, Cohasset is beseiged with requests by builders to develop property within those yet-undefined perimeters.

Water commissioners, Board of Health members, and members of the Watershed Protection District Advisory Committee have all signified their support of a temporary moratorium on any construction within the watershed district until that final bylaw is approved by the town.

The tempoary ban is being compiled by the Town Counsel's office, as officials anxiously await the draft.

We want businesses to co-exist peaceably with our residential areas. We want the proper businesses to locate in the proper area of our community. But we firmly believe that development within our proposed watershed area is incorrect. Any encroachment within our water supply area will only spell trouble for our future.

We believe that caution today will help to protect our future. We agree with the town's call for a building moratorium in this area and stand with them in any future court actions challenging this right.

One question remains, why would any reputable builder want to develop in this area, knowing full well the town stands against such a proposal, and that development may prove unwise and unhealthful for the people who already reside here ?

Don't tempt the heavens

By Claire McDonough

The family was waiting for the smoke detector to sound and tell them dinner was ready, and someone had turned the television on.

The screen revealed a group of very devout people encouraging an ecstatic young woman to tell her story, punctuating the tale with little cries of gladness every time she finished a sentence.

With eyes filled with joy and a voice that trembled, the woman confessed that she had once failed to appreciate the good man who was her husband. He, of course, had no choice but to seek consolation in the arms of others.

Instead of recognizing her own guilt, this wife had actually become angry at her poor, misunderstood husband. (I am not making this up. My family heard it too.)

She had made up her mind to leave him; no small trick, since the man in question had not been home in three months, and how do you leave someone who isn't there?

Fortunately, she happened to see this program on television, and called in on the prayer line seeking guidance. The very devout people explained the error of her ways to the young woman, and urged her to join them in prayer that her husband would return, and that he would give her another chance. (I repeat, I really am not making this up.)

The lady gladly added her pleas to those of the very devout people, and lo and behold, who should walk in the door ready to forgive and forget? You guessed it.

Talk about your happy endings.

The Dragon looked at me curiously.

"Would you be as devout as that woman?" he asked.

"If I were to stray — of course, I never would," he added hastily, "but if, would you pray that I'd return and give you a chance?"

"You bet I would," I replied.

The Dragon looked surprised. "You would?"

"I would. 'Oh, Lord,' I would pray, 'just send him back. Just let him walk through the door. That door over there. Please.' "

The Dragon looked uneasy. "Is that all you'd ask for?"

I smiled virtuously. "What else would I have to ask for if you came in the door? This would give me my chance, just like that lady on television got a chance."

"A chance for you to do what?"

I smiled wickedly. "There's one way to find out."

The Dragon shook his head. "I told you I never would. And anyway, I don't think you're ready to have all that devotion thrust upon you."

Fortunately for him, at that point the smoke detector went off.

With a sigh of relief, the Dragon offered me his arm. "Dinner is ready," he announced. "And it appears that now we'll never know what would happen if you were in the position of that young lady."

I smiled inscrutably. "Heaven only knows," I agreed.

MAPC urges state control of park land

(This letter was sent to William P. Clark, Secretary of the Interior by The Executive Director of The Metropolitan Area Planning Council. Ed.)

To the Editor:

The Metropolitan Area Planning Council adds its voice to those of other Massachusetts public entities urging the federal government to donate for public use the entire 767 acres of federal land in Hingham and Cohasset abutting Wompatuck State Park. The MAPC supports the position of the abutting communities opposing the sale of this land for private development.

The 767-acre parcel in question presents a unique opportunity to enhance several existing open-space areas. It is of interest to note that those properties have been maintained for public use by three different entities: the commonwealth (Wompatuck State Park), the town of Hingham (Triphammer Pond Park) and the Trustees of Reservations, a private organization (Whitney Woods Reservation). The federal government is given the opportunity to donate the 767 acres and facilitate the creation of a 5000-acre recreation area.

Letters

The alternative being considered by the General Services Administration, to offer a prime 135-acre parcel for sale, would greatly detract from the quality of the remaining open space. For the federal government to pursue this latter option would be an unfortunate counterpoint to the public-minded commitment shown by the state, local and private entities owning nearby land.

The MAPC is the regional planning agency for the 101 cities and towns in the Boston metropolitan area. Our mandate includes the responsibility to balance regional needs in such areas as housing, open space, transportation and water quality. We recognize the need to create housing opportunities in our region and we work closely with state and municipal officials to increase the availability of housing. However, the unique situation of the federal land in question strongly recommends its continued use as open space rather than as a relatively small number of house lots. We hope you agree.

Sewer board supports state land

(This letter was written to William P. Clark, Secretary, Department of the Interior, by Sewer Commission Chairman Charles DeSantis. Ed.)

Dear Sir:

I write to you of our grave concern for our town's future. First, our town lies in the fringe of the intensely developed Boston Metropolitan Area, an area suffering from a lack of adequate public potable water. Cohasset at a great expense during the '70s voted a new reservoir and water treatment plant to serve its own needs and those of our neighbors well into the future. The 132 acres which the GSA wishes to sell for development lies in the highlands of the watershed of this reservoir. Development of these acres would create an unacceptable threat to that water resource.

Second, we recognize that open space in the intensely developed areas of our country is a priceless treasure for ourselves today and for the enjoyment of future generations. Open land in its natural state, accessible to millions of greater Bostonians means more recreation and peacefulness than 2,000,000 acres of parkland in inaccessible Alaska.

A past generation of local residents proudly relinquished this land during a time of great need. Now that this land has served its usefulness for our national defense, we wish it returned in its entirety, at no cost to the Commonwealth of MA, so it can now best serve our needs — water shed protection and recreation.

We join with our Water Commissioners, members of the Board of Selectmen, Conservation Commission, and Recreation Department in asking that the entire 767 acres be returned to the Commonwealth at no charge to the taxpayers of the State. We can think of no other act which would gain more local respect for your department and the Administration than the return of the entire 767 acres. We count on your sense of fairness and concern.

Candidates' corner . . .

This week we've asked State Senate candidates Anna Doherty and William Golden to answer this: What expectations, if any should South Shore residents have for improvement in transportation within the next five years and what is it likely to be?

Anna Doherty

There will be little or no significant relief for the weary South Shore commuter in the next 5 years. Our present transportation crisis is the result of twenty years of state inaction and poor planning. Commuter rail, an option available to those who live north and west of the Hub was allowed to expire on the South Shore in the early 60's while all public funding and planning went to highways and the MBTA. The shift back has begun with the proposal of Senator Edward Kirby (R-Second Plymouth District) to restore commuter rail service from Plymouth and Middleboro to South Station. The rebuilding of the Neponset River Bridge will once again link the South Shore directly to South Station; bypassing the bottleneck of the Red Line or the Expressway.

Expanded bus service always runs afoul of these two overburdened routes. As the Expressway repairs continue we must press for the retention of at least a reserved right of way for buses in the final plan. High occupancy vehicle lanes may be difficult to enforce but it is the only means open to increase the ride capacity of the Expressway. Continued public support of commuter boats and expansion of service to include Logan Airport with feeder bus or van service is a necessity which must be pursued.

For any significant relief for the commuter by 1995 we need to begin now to restore commuter rail to the South Shore by rebuilding the Neponset River Bridge and setting in motion the restoration of the Green Bush Line.

State Senate candidate Anna Doherty has been greeting voters at public gathering places in local towns. She has introduced herself to voters at the Scituate and Cohasset dumps on Saturday mornings and has been greeting morning commuters at the Hingham, Cohasset, and Marshfield commuter bus stops.

On October 9 Doherty will take part in Candidates Night sponsored by the Marshfield Chamber of Commerce.

On October 10 a debate will be aired on WEEI Radio at 8:30 p.m. in which Doherty participated.

The following coffees are scheduled for the candidate this month.

October 10 at Mrs. Dorothy Page's home on Stockbridge Road in Scituate.

October 16 at the Harvey and Leslie Russ home in Scituate.

October 17 at Mr. and Mrs. Adams home at Bradly Road in North Weymouth.

October 21 at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Skip Fryling in Scituate.

October 22 at the Main Street home of Mr. and Mrs. Smith of Hingham.

October 23 at the home of Joyce Daniels, Monument Circle, Hingham.

William Golden

Transportation on the South Shore is a disaster. We need a balanced, multi-modal transportation system which is efficient, reliable, safe, and user-friendly. Our transportation problems are the result of years of neglect and a failure to develop a long-term regional transportation policy which is designed to meet the needs of South Shore residents and not the needs of the City of Boston. To properly address this transportation crisis, our next state senator must lead a united legislative delegation of state and local officials to obtain the state and federal resources necessary for a two-pronged approach to solving this problem.

The first step is to examine each available mode of transportation to upgrade the level of service it currently provides, and to determine what role, if any, each should play in meeting our future needs. The second step is to develop a regional plan to meet our present and long-term needs.

In addressing the necessity for a comprehensive transportation plan a fundamental choice must be made as to whether the MBTA is a competent and appropriate institution to continue to service our bus and subway needs. To date, the MBTA has failed miserably in its efforts to provide safe, clean, reliable and comfortable service to the South Shore. It is both unfair and deceptive to continue to rely on the MBTA if it refuses to adapt its operations to meet the indigenous needs of South Shore towns. The time has come to challenge the MBTA to either assume its statutory responsibility to provide the South Shore with first-class service or to allow us to secede from the MBTA and establish our own regional transportation authority (RTA). Although this would be a measure of last resort, the South Shore must seriously consider whether its own operating authority would better serve our needs.

An RTA would allow South Shore communities to set up their own system through direct receipt of state and federal funds. The South Shore, like Brockton with its BAT system, could run its own buses and contract directly for commuter rail and MBTA subway services.

While developing a long-term policy, there are immediate steps we should take to improve our transportation system. In examining South Shore highways, it is as important to improve traffic safety and efficiency on Rtes 3A, 18, 53, 228, and 139 as it is to demand short-term improvements like a third lane to the So. Weymouth and Norwell exits on Rt. 3. After reconstruction, the SE Expressway should continue to provide express lanes and limited access. The Red Line must improve frequency of operations through better equipment and maintenance. Commuter boat transportation must receive increased state aid to ensure the availability of docking facilities, both on the South Shore and in Boston. Passengers must have all-weather protection prior to boarding, the ability to purchase tickets which facilitate transfer to subway and bus transportation, and adequate parking.

Finally, the ideal mass transportation system must consider alternative modes, such as commuter rail. There is no acceptable explanation as to why the state has failed to realistically evaluate the rehabilitation of the Greenbush, Old Colony, and Cape Cod/Hyann is rail lines as potential key components of tomorrow's South Shore transportation system. For too long, the South Shore has been the poor step-sister of Boston, while the North Shore and western suburbs of Boston enjoyed superior service. It's time for the South Shore to exert sufficient political clout to obtain our fair share of resources to meet local and regional needs. As your next state senator, I believe I have the ability and qualifications to get the job done.

House numbers serve a purpose

(This senario was written by Capt. Mark Trask specifically for Fire Prevention Week, Oct. 7-14. Ed.)

With a start, he sat upright in bed. The liquid green numbers of the cursed clock radio beamed 4:13. The house was enveloped in the cold black darkness of the early hours. The faint buzzing noise became more persistent as the cobwebs of sleep melted away.

Suddenly he could smell it. Faintly but unquestionably the distinct odor of smoke invaded his nostrils. Galvanized into action he pulled his wife from the bed and into the hall. The smoke cut into his throat as he told her over the clamor of the smoke detectors to call the Fire Department. At the stairs he met the kids groping their way down, coughing and spluttering. Quickly they exited to the front yard.

"Cohasset Fire Department, this call is being recorded," answered the dispatcher.

"Our house is on fire!" she blurted.

"Okay ma'am, what is the address?"

"One eighty-four East Main Street!"

"Please hurry! Hurry!" her voice quavered.

"Units are on the way."

When she joined the rest of the family in the yard, smoke could be seen puffing from around the windows, doors, and at the edges of the roof. It curled ominously into the moonlit sky as they huddled coughing together. Already sirens and the roar of powerful engines pierced the night air.

Crackling and popping, the fire chewed the house as the engines approached. Out on the street searchlights probed the darkness beyond the trees. He could see the occasional flicker of red lights as the apparatus passed. With a sinking feeling he realized they were not stopping.

"In here! In here!" he screamed as he started running towards the driveway. The roar of the engines faded. Behind him glass crashed and fire burst out of a window.

As he reached the street his heart was pounding in the quiet. Winking lights were coming back in the distance. The engine slowed at the sight of him jumping up and down and waving his arms.

"Is this one eighty-four?" the captain hollered over the roar of the motor.

"Yes! Yes! Right here!" he pointed at the driveway. An orange glow was now visible . . .

. . . as the engine charged into the long drive.

Could this happen to you?

The purpose of this fictional scenario is to dramatize a situation which may become a reality in the Town of Cohasset. Hundreds of houses and other properties in our Town are without identifying street numbers. The Town has been and is expanding at a rapid rate. Cohasset is no longer the little village where everyone knows everyone else and where they live.

What can you do to help solve this problem and prevent an occurrence like the above? Does your house have a number posted? Is it readily visible or has it been painted over, fallen down, or been covered by advancing shrubbery? Do you share a driveway with another house or houses? Are all the numbers posted? Is your house secluded or set back out of sight from the street? If so is the number posted visibly at the street at your driveway?

In observance of Fire Prevention Week The Cohasset Fire Department wishes to make you aware of this situation. It is requested that all property and home-owners practice prevention of the above scenario by numbering their houses. The benefits will be yours.

At your service,
Captain Mark H. Trask
Fire Prevention Officer, on behalf of all members of the Department

LIGHT UP HER LIFE

Give Her an "I LOVE YOU LIGHTHOUSE" Pendant

An Exquisite Gift of Rare Beauty that personifies the worldwide symbol of Constancy, Integrity, and Reliability — the Lighthouse.

Minot's Light — near Boston

People everywhere love lighthouses. For many centuries, lighthouse beacons throughout the world have been helping seafarers to find their way, and as a result, the lighthouse has become — by reputation — the symbol for Constancy, Integrity, and Reliability.

You can now obtain an exquisite new piece of fine jewelry — for gift-giving — which is an exact scale "miniature" of one of the most famous and enchanting lighthouses in America.

Of the more than 400 active lighthouses that line the shores of America's ocean-fronts and its great lakes, one stands out above all the rest, because of the profound meaning it has for "lovers." It's the famous "I LOVE YOU LIGHTHOUSE" — firmly anchored to the treacherous rocks at Minot's Ledge, near the entrance to Boston Harbor.

Every night, its beacon flashes —
"One —
One, Two, Three, Four — One, Two, Three" — spelling out the message of
"I — LOVE — YOU"
(One Four Three)

Enlarged to show detail

Ever since 1894, when it first began flashing its nighttime code, the folks who live on nearby shores have fondly referred to it as the "I LOVE YOU LIGHTHOUSE." Numerous thousands of young lovers have pledged their lifelong vows to each other while watching it flash its message of love. And, many thousands of marriage proposals have been accepted under the magical spell of its beams. This beautiful new "I LOVE YOU LIGHTHOUSE" Pendant made of bright solid gold, is embedded with four sparkling diamonds to represent these magical beams.

When you give your favorite lady her "I LOVE YOU LIGHTHOUSE" Pendant, she will be delighted and entranced. You will be reminding her that she is the beacon in your life and when she wears her Lighthouse Pendant, she will be reminded of the Constancy of your love, plus the Integrity and Reliability of your feelings for her — for many years to come.

Each "I LOVE YOU LIGHTHOUSE" Pendant is being individually handcrafted by the artisans at the J. T. Inman Goldsmith Workshops, a small "specialty" jewelry model shop that has been making fine, handmade jewelry ever since 1882. Their client list includes Cartiers, Nieman Marcus, Shreves, Tiffanys, plus many other top jewelry houses throughout America. They are making a special Limited Edition version of the "I LOVE YOU LIGHTHOUSE" Pendant in solid 18 Karat Gold with its beacon represented by four, brilliant, round cut Diamonds — totalling over one-quarter Karat — mounted in the tower section of the Pendant. They are also handcrafting two lower-priced Registered Edition versions — one in 14 Karat Gold and another in Gold Vermeil — as shown in the coupon below. In fact, you can obtain one of these extraordinary Pendants — made of Gold Vermeil — using Cubic Zirconia stones (simulated diamonds) for as little as $95.

In addition to the Limited Edition and Registered Edition collector value and the personalized expression of love which this lovely pendant conveys, it is an extremely outstanding jewelry value. If you visit any jewelry store and examine the variety of mass-produced pendants using similar materials, you will find that many cost more — and most cost much more. However, none will have this pendant's unusual combination of handcraftsmanship, rare beauty, unique design, and above all, its profound romantic significance — with its special message of "I Love You."

Every Lighthouse Pendant comes in an attractive, velveteen-lined jewelry gift box, which includes a small pamphlet that tells the charming and romantic story of the "I LOVE YOU LIGHTHOUSE."

It is fully guaranteed (see below) and for your insurance protection, a Certificate of Authenticity will be sent to you about thirty days after your Pendant has been delivered.

To subscribe to this offer, just call us – at 800-835-2246 – toll free, or mail the coupon below. If you wish, you may charge your purchase by using one of your major credit cards.

The "I LOVE YOU LIGHTHOUSE" Pendant is available only through the Limited Editions Collectors Society — and is not available in stores. It's truly a captivating piece of jewelry and a gift that is sure to be treasured always, because it says —

"One — — — — — — "I
One, Two, Three, Four — LOVE
One, Two, Three." — — YOU"

UNCONDITIONALLY GUARANTEED

Each "I LOVE YOU LIGHTHOUSE" Pendant is fully and unconditionally guaranteed. If you are not completely satisfied with yours when it arrives — or after you have examined it for thirty day — just send it back for a replacement or a full refund. We will also reimburse you for the cost of postage and insurance to return it — no questions asked.

Cohasset fall sports scene

By Lisa Shumaker

The girls started off their week Thursday with a loss to Duxbury, 4 to 0. Cohasset played very well in the first half and was only losing 1 to 0 at half time. However, in the second half, Duxbury heated up and overpowered Cohasset.

Friday, in a makeup game against Norwell, Cohasset bounced back and beat a weak Norwell team 4 to 0. Cohasset's offense led by Maureen Farreen who had three goals, played very well. Kara MacDonald picked up her first goal of the season as well. Halfbacks, Lee Sullivan and Maria Cahill were both outstanding for Cohasset.

Varsity Boys' Football

Saturday, Cohasset lost in a disappointing game to Abington 18 to 14. Abington scored two touchdowns in the first quarter to take the lead 12 to 0. However, Cohasset proudly came back and scored twice before the first half was over to take the lead 14 to 12. Floyd Hardwick scored on a 50 yard run. Bobby Durkin scored on a four yard run as well as kicking two extra points. Unfortunately, Abington came back in the second half and scored. Cohasset, on the other hand, was not able to take advantage of scoring opportunities and was not able to score.

For Cohasset, Danny Curran had the best game of his career, and Bobby Durkin had a great game offensively. Jeff Brown, Jeff Soltesz, Jay Contis, and Floyd Hardwick all played well. Defensively, Jackie Cooper and John Hall played excellently. Mark LaHive played well both ways.

Next week Cohasset will play Holbrook for their homecoming game. Phil Pisano, the team's coach, hopes Cohasset will let out their frustrations and beat Holbrook.

Boys' Varsity Soccer

The boys had a tough week losing to Duxbury, Wednesday and Hanover, Friday. Against Duxbury, Cohasset lost 2 to 0. Overall, Cohasset played very well, but the ball would just not go into the net for Cohasset.

Billy McKenna had a very good game in net. Bobby Shultz and David MacDonald also played outstandingly. Greg Igo played excellently on defense.

Friday, Hanover beat Cohasset 1 to 0. Cohasset played and outshot Hanover, but missed good chances to score. Both John Reidy and Greg Igo had strong games for Cohasset.

Tuesday the boys will play in Whitman/Hanson. This will be a tough game for Cohasset. Saturday at 10 a.m., Cohasset will try to beat Scituate.

Varsity Girls' Soccer

The girls started off the week crushing Holbrook 7 to 1. Carla Lucas, Janet Bagley, Amy Duncombe, Kerri Kirkendall, Karin Anglin, and Tessica Hamilton all scored for Cohasset. Sarah Seavey, Kerri Kirkendall and Melissa Shea all picked up assists during this game. Joanie Chisolm played excellent on defense.

Thursday, in Abington, Cohasset tied 1 to 1. Abington is ranked fourth in the state. Janet Bagley, assisted by Sarah Seavey, scored Cohasset's only goal. Goalie, Tracy Fitzpatrick, played very well for Cohasset. Coach, Kennan Startzell, was very pleased with this game but a little disappointed that it ended with a tie.

Monday, Cohasset overpowered Scituate 2 to 0. Janet Bagley scored both goals, assisted by Amy Duncombe and Sarah Seavey. Leading scorer for

Cohasset fall sports scene

Cohasset, Janet Bagley has improved tremendously. Kerri O'Brien and Janet DiGorolamo both had good games as well. Startzell is very pleased with his team and feels his team is very easy to coach.

Hugo's sweeps Strawberry Parfait

Sunday, Sept. 30, the 1984 South Shore Civic Men's Softball League Season came to a close with a four game sweep of Strawberry Parfait by Hugo's to clinch the championship trophy.

The final game of this best out of seven games series between the two league finalists, both Cohasset teams, resulted in a 9-4 win by Hugo's.

They led 3-0 after four innings, stretching their lead to 9-2 after six innings, thus capturing the league title.

Under the leadership of head coach Bob Malnoti and assistant coach Jimmy Burns, a strong defense and consistent good pitching by Ned and Tom Nista were key components of Hugo's four consecutive victories over the Strawberry Parfait.

Hugo's beat Building 19-the Hingham Police in a tough, five game series to advance to the finals.

Hugo's wishes to extend its sincere thanks to all the fans who gave their support throughout the season.

A banquet will be held in honor the 1984 league champions Hugo's and all other league participants Oct. 12 at the Weymouth Sons of Italy.

Zoning board grants condo renovations

Some residents expressed concern that the former camp would no longer be used for retarded persons.

According to the zoning board, Thomas Coyne of North Main Street objected to the special permit because he believes that even further development will be proposed in the future, including the parcels lying to the north.

The board determined there would be no significant traffic problems caused by the development, nor would the conversion affect the water facilities. Board members agreed the return of the property to the tax rolls would have a positive economic effect and upgrading of the structure would improve the neighborhood.

The board granted the special permit with the following conditions: that the lot specified as Lot 4 remain undivided and dedicated to common land; that the Building Inspector review the plans to determine zoning compliance and whether a variance is necessary; that parking should include the required two spaces per unit and four extra spaces for guests' and the driveway and parking area conform to the requirements of the fire department.

LWV sponsors first candidates' debate

By Lois Martin

In the U.S. Congressional race, Republican Lewis Crampton of Plymouth spoke his piece for wanting the seat held by U.S. Congressman Gerry Studds for 12 years. Studds was in Washington, D.C. working toward the fresh deadline for the budget. In his stead was Eileen O'Brien who read a letter from the representative.

Democrat William Golden and Republican Anna Doherty were on hand to campaign for the state senate seat being surrendered by State Sen. Allan McKinnon. It was at this juncture when cookie-cutter campaigning began to give way as Doherty drew light but clear contrasts in her background and that of Golden..."I will never out charisma Bill," she said.

Robert Schmitt, president of the Chamber, gave each candidate seven minutes in which to present his or her position.

STUDDS vs. CRAMPTON

Eileen O'Brien read Studds' letter to the group.

"I have a 12-year record of achievement of which I am very proud," he wrote.

Studds pointed to legislative action that has evolved since his tenure in office, citing his 'achievements' particularly in marine/coastal protective laws. "No issues are more local than those that affect us all....a freeze on nuclear arms, a ban on production and use of weapons in space," he wrote. Referring to the combination of himself and a seasoned staff, Studds said 'Our record is a strong one." The congressman referred to the 700 open meetings he and staff members have conducted since he went to Washington, and he urged people to attend what is billed as being the significant debate of the season Oct. 18 in Hingham, sponsored by the League of Women Voters.

Lewis Crampton, now of Plymouth, like Studds has a residency of record in Cohasset but is 'from' Duxbury.

Under former Gov. Francis Sargent, Crampton said he worked on anti-proverty matters, including housing, "the key issues of the late 60s....I built 3500 units for family and elderly housing and still cut that budget by three percent," he said, "I was on the television show 'The Advocates,' which won an Emmy. And I can be an effective advocate for your concerns in debate."

Like State Senate Candidate Golden, Crampton has background in the federal Environmental Protection Agency. Of the clean air/water, acid rain worries, Crampton said, "I have taken an activist approach to the key issues of the South Shore."

DOHERTY & GOLDEN

William Golden, a South Shore native now of South Weymouth, told the approximately 125 people he has had experience at every level of public service...federal, state, county and local.

"I drafted the EPA. I was selected by Ralph Nader to do an analysis of the U.S. Congress on the roads subcommittee.

Golden's background, that prefaced his profession as an attorney, includes work in the District Attorney's office, solicitorship for Quincy, as well as a private practice with his own firm for eight years.

"There is a new realism," said Golden. We have limited resources. The growing problems are not longer town oriented on the South Shore. They are regional. We need regional cooperation, we need a strong advocate for the South Shore."

Anna Doherty, also an attorney, told listeners she and Golden (whose votes have not been tested she noted) were job applicants with resumes.

"I was asked by a newspaper publisher (David Cutler of Mariner Newpapers) how I expected to beat Bill Golden with the money he had to spend and with the backing of Dukaksis. You know, if people are 'with your,' it's a grass roots. If they're against you, it's a 'political machine.' I can't outcharisma Bill. I plan to get out to more than 80,0000 voters in the district."

Doherty lightly drew comparison with her UMass/Suffolk background with that of Golden's Yale/Harvard training. She said while he was in Washington working on the bureaucracy, she was working with Hastings Keith to unscramble that red tape for the needs of the constituency. She was attorney for the state Department of Mental Health and said that resulted in $30 million being returned to the Commonwealth.

Children eagerly explore Spain

The children are as eager to explore this new language challenge, as Riley is to guide them. One seventh grade youngster explained he takes the introductory course at school. "I thought it would be good to learn Spanish because it is one of the biggest languages in the world. I take it in school and i really like it," he says.

Another young girl notes that she was born in a country where Spanish was the primary language. Since she moved two years ago at the age of six, her parents thought it would be best if she not forget her native language. "I love it here," she quickly added," but it's nice to know two languages. My Mom wanted me to take the course, but I was the one who decided to take it."

It's difficult for Riley to separate the older students from the very young children. He will begin the older kids on written skills, while concentrating on frequently-used-verbal expressions for the younger ones. But everyone seems to enjoy the class.

There are no fears of incorrect or over-accentuated pronounciations in this classroom on the second floor of the community center. Children do not giggle at faltering words from a struggling novice. They are too busy learning and enjoying the process.

"Que hora es?" the teacher inquires. "Que hora es?" his ten students repeat in unison.

"Es la una," he replies quickly, demonstrating on a clock chart that it is indeed one o'clock. The children reply in echo, "Es la una." They begin to write the phrase on a sheet of paper showing the matching times.

Directions, expressions and advice is given to the youngsters in Spanish. And whether or not they understand completely, the students do as requested.

"Silencio. Repita. Listos? Si senor? Estudia. Como se dice?" the teacher replies at various intervals. The students barely look from their papers, but nod in agreement, or answer - always in Espanol.

At one point in his class, Riley was chattering in Spanish. A young girl, not lifting her head from her concentrated study, raised her hand and politely admonished the professor. "You're going to too fast again!"

"The children have no inhibitions. And that's great. If they make a mistake, they don't mind. They're enjoying it too much to notice," Riley says.

As a native of Northern Maine, he spoke English as well as French. In high school he also learned Russian and Latin. Riley's favorite languages are French and Spanish, although he did take a course in Japanese last year, and recommends Latin for a better comprehension of English grammatical structure.

"I suppose if a student had the choice of studying only one foreign language, I would choose Spanish. There are many Spanish-speaking people in the United States, many of them in the Boston area," Riley states.

But if there was one overwhelming reason to guide children into learning a second language, it would be, he says, to understand that country's culture and heritage.

"There are two students in this class who are of Spanish origin," he explains. "If everyone had a better understanding of all the different cultures, this would be a better world."

WEDNESDAY NIGHT POTLUCKS: The first Wednesday Night Potluck was successful in a number of ways. Out of informal discussion two new members of the choir were recruited. The really important outcome of the evening, however, was good fellowship enjoyed by 16 people who shared a remarkably well-balanced meal topped by Boston creme pie.

SOUTH SHORE CLUSTER DINNERS: Thanks to Marianne White and Cam Long and crew we hosted a delicious roast beef dinner here in September. The next cluster dinner will be at Old Ship Church in Hingham on Thursday, Nov. 9, with Old Ship providing the dinner and First Parish providing the program. Look for details in future bulletin.

Keep your calendars free as there is a festive month ahead.

GRADES 7 AND 8: Your next meeting will be on Oct. 14 when you will attend the service in Duxbury. You will be notified of the time.

YOUTH GROUP: We are planning a fundraising pancake breakfast. Your participation is essential in the next few weeks. Please plan to be at our next meeting Oct. 14 at 7 p.m.

SENIOR CHOIR: Bring a sandwich to church next Sunday. We plan an impromptu luncheon and getting-ahead rehearsal on our Great Performances music in Trueblood Hall after the service (after coffee hour, that is!).

Campbell on a subsequent Sunday, please contact him at 383-0021.

Mask-Making course

Sculptor and potter Syma Komarin of Hingham will be conducting a mask-making workshop at the South Shore Art Center, Cohasset, for teens and adults Thursday, Oct. 18 at 7:30 p.m. Here's the ideal opportunity to make a Halloween mask that really fits. Syma demonstrates on model Paul Coletti, also of Hingham, the technique that uses the same material that casts are made out of to create a life-mask, which can then be painted or otherwise decorated. The charge for the course is $10 plus $3 per mask for materials. For more information or to register for the course, call the Art Center at 383-9548.

'Evening of Adventurous and Mainstream Jazz'

"An Evening of Adventurous and Mainstream Jazz" is the title of the first concert in the series, Four Fridays at Eight, presented by the Friends of the South Shore Conservatory.

It will be held in Cox Hall at the school, off 19 Fort Hill St. in Hingham Friday, Oct. 19 at 8 p.m.

This will be the second year of this series, featuring faculty members, which drew standing room only crowds last season. The Oct. 19 program will present a quintet made up of members of the Jazz Department at the Conservatory, all professional musicians: Jeff Harrington (sax), Paul Shumsky (guitar), Ed Sorrentino (percussion), Bevan Manson and guest, Jim Guttman (bass).

The quintet will play a selection of standards plus some original pieces by pianist/composer, Bevan Mason, a new addition to the SSCM faculty. Manson holds a Master's degree from the Eastman School of Music. He is a teacher at Berklee College, a composer, recording artist and has extensive performing experience.

A special part of the program will be an arrangement by Manson of a Gershwin medley. It will be performed by a faculty sextet including: Julie Darling (flute), David Cross (clarinet), David Bannard (trumpet), Doug Wauchope (trombone), Betty Reed (piano), and Ed Sorrentino (percussion).

Following the program, members of the Friends Committee will host a reception at which guests may meet the artists and enjoy refreshments. There is not charge for this series which the Friends present as a service to the community.

However, a donation to the Conservatory Scholarship Fund will be welcomed. The Conservatory is a non profit community school of the arts which is funded in part by the Mass. Council on the Arts and Humanities.

Planning something outdoorsy for a fall weekend is chancy here in New England, to put it mildly. We know the odds favor a blustery northeast wind, forcing us indoors by the fire and yet, the chance of perhaps just one more sunny, mild autumn day is so irresistible that we dare to tempt fate and so many daring souls set in motion plans for a tailgate party. This ritual autumnal outdoor party preceding a football game calls for hot, hearty foods prepared at home for a picnic without ants. As for transporting the food from kitchen to the game, cover the food when heated with foil and newspaper and pack in a Thermos chest. The bulk of your eating utensils can be forks and spoons of white plastic and plastic "airplane glasses." From Southern Pines, S.C. we have Connie Burkhardt's recipe for a traditional southern dish called

BRUNSWICK STEW

1 stewing chicken (3 to 4 lbs.)
1/4 lb. salt pork or bacon
1 red pepper pod
1/2 tsp. pepper, 1 tsp. salt
1 c. chopped onions
2 c. each green butter beans, corn, diced tomatoes
1/2 c. diced green pepper

Cut chicken as for frying. Dice salt pork and place with chicken and seasonings in large kettle with enough cold water to cover. Bring slowly to boil, simmer until chicken drops from bones. Remove bones. Add onions and green beans. (If desired, 2 c. diced potatoes may be added with 1 c. diced celery.) Cook until vegetables are well done. Add remaining veggies and cook approx. 30 min. longer, stirring now and then to prevent sticking. If traditional thick stew is desired, cook longer stirring often.

A rainy Oct. 13 will wash away all hope of a fun day at Marshfield's Dwyer Farm, for the day-long festival will not be rescheduled. However, as in everything, there's a ray of sunshine for all those planning to enter the pie contest, for if rained out, certainly one's family would never let your harvest pie go to waste. Sandra Bell is planning the event and says the response has been excellent in the apple pie field, so you may want to try your hand at cranberry, pumpkin, or other seasonal recipe. For more information, call Sandra at 837-9400.

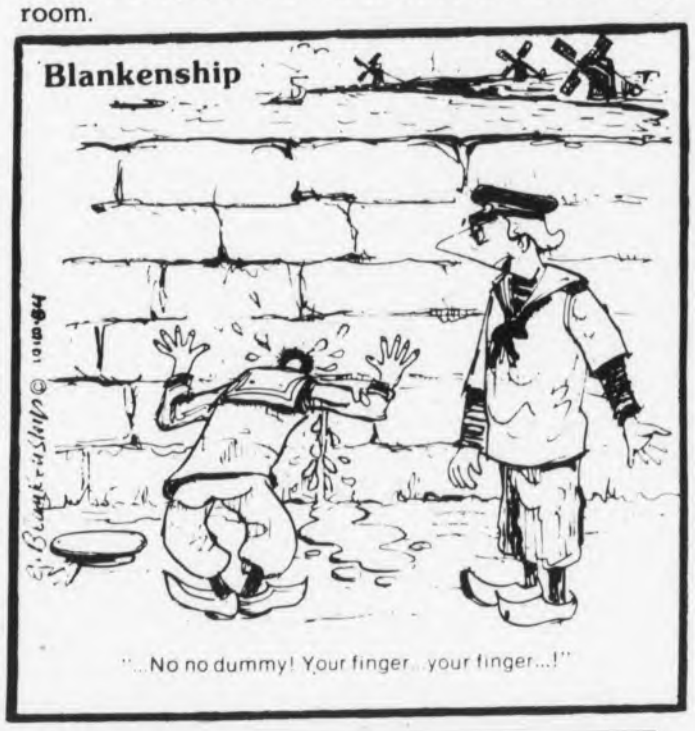
Now that summer vacations are over, a long weekend doesn't allot time to roam too far afield; certainly not on a cruise such as Barbara Whitcomb has taken more than once out of Newport, R.I. This is a recipe she brought back from the chef on board the New Shoreham II of the American Canadian Linesandincrediblycalled

KILLER WHALE STEW

1 killer whale
2 rabbits (optional)
salt, pepper

Cut whale into bite-size pieces. This should take about two months. Add enough brown gravy to cover. Cook over wood fire at 462 degrees for about four weeks. Serves 3800 people. If more are expected, two rabbits may be added; but do this only if necessary, as most people don't like to find hare in their Killer Whale Stew!

Those who want to enjoy the beauty of our New England countryside will be backpacking their lunches to hike through the trails and paths leading through forests blazing with fall foliage. Sharing the deserted beaches with the gulls while hiking the sands whets one's appetite. When your energy flags, it's time for a break with this



TRAIL MIX

1 lb. raisins
1 lb. shelled, mixed nuts
1/2 lb. shredded coconut
2 c. whole wheat cereal flakes

Mix all ingredients together, making sure they are well separated. Divide into small packets and carry along for quick energy and nutrition.

For those intrepid souls who dare to camp out one last weekend, this dish is a good, hearty one. Timid souls can enjoy it in the comfort of their cozy dining room.

"...No no dummy! Your finger...your finger...!"

FIRST NIGHT CHILI

2 lb. ground beef
1 onion and 1 green pepper, chopped
2 cans stewed tomatoes
2 cans pinto or kidney beans
3 T chili powder, or more to taste

Brown meat at home and freeze. Chop onions and pepper at home. Keep very cold. At the camp ground, prepare the charcoal grill and allow the coals to glow for about 30 min. Mix ingredients in covered container. Simmer for an hour until flavors are blended and chili is thick. Bake some prepared biscuits according to package directions. Use a square of foil or a pie tin as baking pan. Serve chili with biscuits and some shredded cheese.

Please tell No.5790228 his mother called

"Whenever they say #5790228," he said, "I stand up."

Who in heaven's name goes around responding to #5790228 as if it were his name? A prisoner? We'll continue to hope not. And it certainly doesn't represent his place in the family.

Instead it's a number assigned a college student at UMass/Amherst. It lacks warmth. True, the nom de college has avoided use of slang in the number. It does, I suppose, beat "Bobo," or "Lucky," and it has not infringed the discretion of seeming too familiar.

What it is instead, however, is miserably cold, to be known as #5790228.

PATCHES

By Lois Martin

I know this person as Terrence Martin. I use variation of that name when speaking to or of him. But UMass is bigger than I am (I'd like that marked on the record).

And college days and nuances continue to evolve to a way of life that is as strange as that on Mars to parents of offspring who live there.

In fairness to unscramblers of university students' records, Terry became entirely familiar with his number late last spring.

He entered unwittingly into a long debate with the computer who named him. And he lost.

#5790228 was, said the computer, sent a postcard which he was to return by a certain time reserving his room for the next year.

According to the student, Terrence did that. According to the computer, he did not. The result was that #5790228 had no room for the fall semester.

This happens now and then, I hear. I gather that colleges and universities, in order to avoid losing money on students who show and then drop out, overbook. Kind of like airlines.

So in exchanges of summer correspondence, the computer said it could do nothing for this number. However, the Bursar's Office had no problem sending the bill, verification of payment, and eventually the list of courses for the fall.

But no room. The postcard's return was a moot point. The computer has clout. You either satisfy it or you go down there early in September to wait in line for a room that's near a boiler or something until someone drops out. At least that was my limited glimmer of understanding.

The day he got there he and two others, who ticked off the computer, were assigned to a lounge. And they love it. Eventually all the unassigned students were given choices of quarters for interim sleeping. That's all they do down there anyway, is sleep now and then on some erratic pattern only their young bodies could accommodate.

But these three have decided to stay with the lounge. Terry says the others have great stereos. They mounted a mini hoop for the seriousNerf basketball games. And they refer to the room as "The Auditorium."

It's difficult, having attended the more familiar, yet cozy, University of Maine in Orono, to handle the evolution that has transformed college universities. My room had a patchwork quilt of an aunt's making, a braided rug, rocking chair. No men were allowed on the floor. Curfew started at 7:30 p.m. for freshmen girls the first semester and advanced to the bodacious 10:30 weekdays for upperclassmen.

Now I've no idea if anyone would notice the absence of a student, save the computer who's perspective is unimpassioned toward its clientele.

Now that I know what they call him out there, I'll probably be able to reach him. I can just call the library and ask for ole #5790228. 'Cause I've said to my dear little boys over the years that I had the comfort of knowing they were always in the library.

They never denied it. And remember, it's a mother's right not to know everything. All we need to know is their number and we've got that, right? Right.

Musings

By John H. Cutler

☐ A gold digger is a woman after all.

☐ James Michael Curley, who said a good politician "must think ahead of the mob," once told me that when he made a political appointment he created a thousand enemies and one ingrate.

☐ Formula for an adventurous life: Don't be afraid to make the bold move.

☐ The best chefs probably don't have time to correspond with their pan pals.

☐ My favorite definition of a jury: 12 men chosen to decide who has the best lawyer.

☐ People who buy books on lawn care become good weeders.

☐ The late John Wayne defined flattery as "phony express."

☐ June is the month of brides. The other 11 months are devoted to divorces.

☐ A golfer blames fate for most accidents, but feels personally responsible when he makes a hole in one.

☐ The first half of our lives is ruined by our parents, the second half by our children.

☐ You know you're in a small town when you get married and the local paper devotes a quarter page to the story.

☐ Today's gals wear less on the street than their grandmothers wore in bed.

☐ Marriage is the only life sentence that can be suspended by bad behavior.

☐ I am still wondering whether it is illegal for nudists to bathe on Duxbury Beach. A nudist, in case you have forgotten, is a person who goes around without a coat or vest and wears pants to match.

☐ An optimist is a person who thinks humorists will someday run out of definitions of an optimist.

☐ May I repeat myself: Today's literature is neurotic, exotic, erotic and tommyrotic.

☐ Eulogy offered up by the Pomeroy (OH) Democrat: For 59 years he practiced medicine, being responsible for most of the babies born in this community.

☐ A student was asked to describe a father. His answer: A kin you love to touch.

☐ Story about a minister in the Muncie (IN) Morning Star: He also did graduate work at the Union Cemetery, N.Y.

Dooley to fight order

Selectmen will not renew Fire Chief's contract

By Jane Lane

Selectmen have notified Fire Chief Martin Dooley he is on the way out.

After a meeting in September with Chief Dooley and his attorney Louis Cassis, selectmen offered to buy the remaining portion of the chief's three-year contract and release him from his administrative post. Although no figure was specified at the time, Chief Dooley and his counsel refused the offer.

Selectmen then stated they would not be renewing his contract when it expires Dec. 31, 1985. Dooley has served almost two-thirds of the three-year agreement.

When asked to specify a reason why they wanted to release the chief from his duties, Atty. Cassis said the town officials forwarded "vague, effusive reasons. We still do not know why they want him out of the department."

Selectmen Chairman Clifford Mitman could not be reached for comment concerning this matter.

Because no specifics have been officially designated as the reason for the selectmen's decision, Atty. Cassis said his client "has notified Town Counsel that he will oppose any attempt to force him to vacate his position." If no specifics are forwarded, for example, poor job performance, Atty. Cassis said the chief may pursue legal action against the Board of Selectmen.

As of now, however, "Chief Dooley wants to keep his job in Cohasset and will explore every means to keep his job," his counsel added.

Chief Dooley, who will be concluding two years of service with the Cohasset fire Department in December, referred all comments to his attorney. He would not comment as to whether he is actively seeking employment outside Cohasset.

Atty. Cassis said selectmen have not verified whether their request was based on job performance or if it was related in any way to the prolonged contract negotiations with the firefighters' union.

Legal and union battles have been waged by the firefighters and Chief Dooley, a derision which formed months after his arrival in Cohasset. Firefighters have constantly requested selectmen's intervention into several grievances filed by the union against their chief.

In September, in an attempt to investigate the internal problems within the department, Selectmen Mitman and Mary Jane McArthur met with many of the firefighters. During the several-hour discussion session, several firefighters detailed their opposition to the chief and listed reasons why they could not work effectively under his administration.

Atty. Cassis said selectmen have not verified whether their request was based on job performance or if it was related in any way to the prolonged contract negotiations with the firefighters' union.

"And," he added, "he will even take legal steps to keep his job beyond the expiration date of his contract."

Money is there, where's ambulance

In the words of Fire Chief Martin Dooley, our ambulance is "tired." But it may be several more months before it is replaced.

Although special Town Meeting in June appropriated $50,000 for a new ambulance, no bid has yet been awarded.

Meanwhile, the Cohasset Fire Department's eight year-old ambulance is out for repairs again. Because the vehicle has been out of use for a week, Chief Dooley said he wouldn't be surprised if repairs cost the town "well over $1000."

This has been the history of the town's ambulance for the past two years, he added. Fortunately, Cohasset is a member of a five-town association which co-owns a back-up vehicle for use when a department's primary ambulance is out of order.

Cohasset has utilized the spare vehicle several times in the past two years, Chief Dooley stated, and this year has been worse than the previous year.

After town meeting appropriated the money in June, Chief Dooley, EMT instructor-coordinator James Gurry, Master Mechanic William Protulis, and four of the department's EMT's developed bid specifications for a new ambulance. Those bids were advertised by selectmen several weeks ago, and were opened during their Aug. 22 meeting.

According to Chief Dooley, he and the firefighters who participated in the bid specs made their recommendations to selectmen six weeks ago. No action has since been taken on those bid proposals.

According to Selectmen Chairman Clifford Mitman, the bids were sent to the recently-formed Emergency Medical Services Advisory Committee. Saying the selectmen wanted the committee's input and recommendations regarding the bids, Mitman noted that committee has not met for a month.

The emergency medical advisory committee will be in session next week, and selectmen expect they will make their recommendations at that time.

Since town meeting approved the appropriation request in June, there have been several costly repairs made to the aging ambulance. As Chief Dooley noted,

Two firms rejected

Town stalled in defining watershed

It's back to the drawing board, as the town begins a renewed attempt to bring a watershed protection bylaw to Cohasset.

After meeting last Wednesday night with engineers from two companies, the Cohasset Water Commissioners decided to start from scratch and bring in more proposals from three other engineering firms, in addition to the previous two. Invitations to present proposals to construct an official watershed protection district survey and assist with the construction of a bylaw, will be sent by the commissioners to five companies, including Camp, Dresser and McKee and S.E.A. Consultants, the two firms which made presentations last week.

At a joint meeting last Wednesday with water commissioners, selectmen, Board of Health members, and members of the Watershed Protection District Advisory Committee, the two companies related how they would complete the necessary studies to develop a legally-defensible bylaw which would protect the town's watershed district and water supply.

This is no simple task, as the companys' representatives explained last week, because about 60 percent of Cohasset's watershed area is located within the neighboring towns of Scituate, Norwell and Hingham.

After the presentation, the town officials huddled together to select one of the companies to complete the task. Special town meeting in June has appropriated $20,000 for the study.

Health board ban

The Board of Health acted under its authority Monday, Oct. 15 to adopt a regulation barring the construction of septic systems within the Lily Pond and Aaron River Watershed Areas.

As part of this proposal "no new septic systems may be constructed within an area of 1000 feet from any town well." According to the Board of Health, the moratorium on septic systems will be in effect until January 1, 1986.

Member Barbara Kern and Chairman Michael Bliss stated that anyone wishing to obtain a variance from these provisions must "submit a written request" to the Board of Health. According to the regulations "the Board of Health may grant the variance if, in the Board's opinion, it has been proven that the installation (of the septic system) will not affect that area."

The Board of Selectmen, the Water Department, and the Board of Health will meet with the Watershed Protection Commission Thursday, October 25, to discuss the building moratorium for the Lily Pond and Aaron River areas.

Fuel assistance applications

Fuel Assistance can be applied for at the Cohasset Town Hall on Fridays, beginning Oct. 26, from 9:15 a.m. until 12 p.m. until further notice.

A representative from the South Shore Community Action Council, Plymouth, will assist fuel applicants in filling out their applications.

Applicants are required to have "Documentation of all Income" for the previous 90 days up to one year, including Social Security verification. "Primary Source of Heat" bills for after Oct. 1, 1984 can also be submitted. Rent receipts are required if heat is included.

Visit to the home will be arranged for shut-ins.

Alfred Odermatt has been reappointed as Selectmen's Representative.

Executive secretary interviews

Selectmen narrowed the field of Executive Secretary candidates this week. They will be interviewing the eight finalists Saturday, Nov. 3.

During that interview session, board members will talk with as many of the candidates as possible, during one-hour intervals.

Selectmen originally received 38 resumes in response to the advertisement of the job vacancy.

Watershed moratorium meeting

Selectmen have called for a meeting to be held Oct. 25 with the Watershed Protection District Advisory Committee, the Board of Health, the Water Commissioners, the Planning Board, the Conservation Commission and Assistant Town Counsel John Slater.

The purpose of the meeting will be to discuss the probable implementation of a construction moratorium within the watershed district. That interim building ban would be enacted until a permanent bylaw prohibiting such construction is developed. It would then be up to Town Meeting to approve such a measure.

Selectmen said this week that a decision and vote will probably be completed at that session. The meeting will be held at 7:30 p.m. in the Town Hall.

Town Hall repairs

Building Inspector Edward Poskus informed selectmen this week that it would cost $9000 to purchase new doors for the Town Hall.

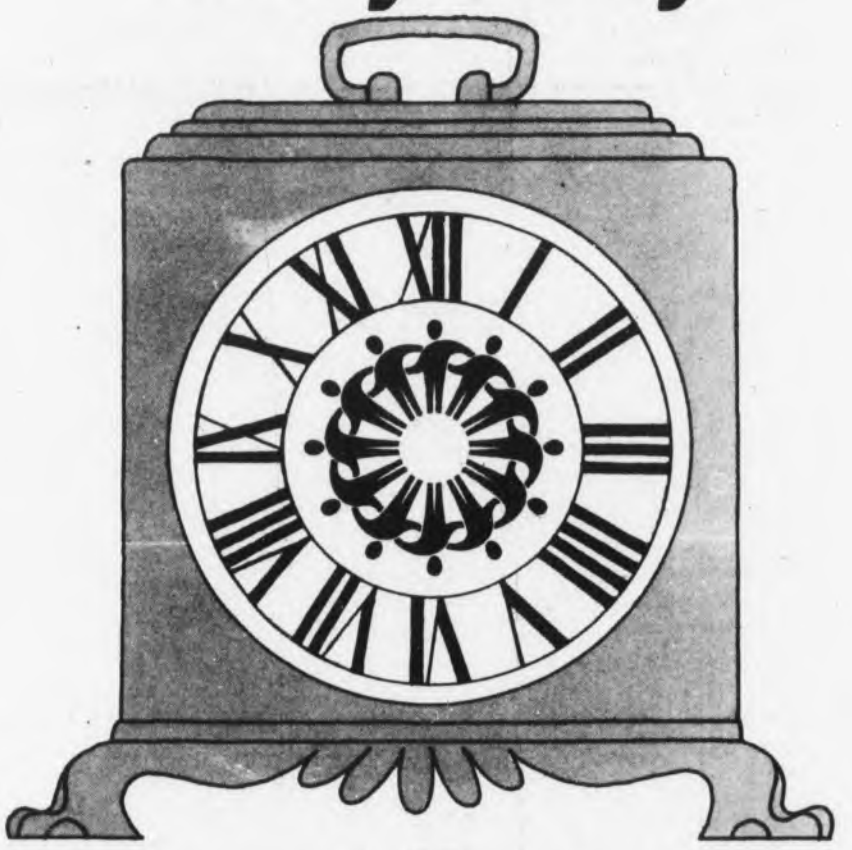
He also noted it would cost about twice that amount for the labor involved in replacing the side and front doors to the building. If the handicapped access ramp was constructed alongside the building, Poskus stated, the total renovations would cost about $30,000.

Selectman Mary Jane McArthur responded, "I'd hate to spend more money until we know what we're going to do with Town Hall." Board members decided that doors to the building could be an appropriation request at the special Town Meeting following the November 19 meeting. The ramp, they noted, is supposed to be a voluntary effort on the part of some townspeople, and should not involve the extensive amount of money estimated by the building inspector.

Change of command

Patrol Squadron Ninety-Two's (VP-92) Commanding Officer, Commander Tom A. Trautwein, will be relieved by Commander Kenneth C. Belisle in a change of command ceremony at 1 p.m. Saturday, Oct. 20 at Naval Air Station, South Weymouth.

Commander Trautwein, a resident of Cohasset, has been Patrol Squadron 92's commanding officer since April 1983. The 1966 graduate of the University of California is currently employed by Proctor and Gamble, Quincy, and will continue his naval reserve duties as commanding officer of the Rota Reserve Unit at South Weymouth.



Commander Belisle, the incoming skipper of VP-92, is a 1967 graduate of the U.S. Naval Academy and has been in aviation since 1968. He has been executive officer of VP-92 for the past year while continuing his civilian career as a pilot with Eastern Airlines.

Study group reviews Town Hall plans

By Lisa J. Messersmith

How important to you is your Town Hall? Several residents of Cohasset met with the Study Committee at the historic town building Thursday Oct. 11 to answer just that question.

Selectmen Cliff Mitman opened the meeting, the purpose of which was to obtain "citizen input" into possible renovations for Town Hall.

Study Committee Chairman Benjamin Blake explained to members of the public that the committee had spent much time examining previous study committee plans for renovation. "The town has to do something about town office spaces," Blake added.

The existing space on the second floor of the building is "inadequate" to house all of the town offices including the four offices in the Bates building. According to Blake, the office space on the second floor will be renovated to "modern standards," and handicapped facilities, including an elevator, must be installed.

Blake presented three plans for renovation to the public. The first plan would be to construct a new Town Hall office building, and either tear down the old hall or retain it for public use. The second alternative would be to leave the building as is, build and addition to one side or to the rear of the hall, and modernize the upstairs offices. This alternative was most favorable to residents present at the meeting.

The last plan, which stirred the most opposition from the public, would be to stay within the hall itself and construct offices where the auditorium and stage now stand, thus eliminating community activities in the building.

Selectman Cliff Mitman presented another suggestion: to retain the stage and use some of the rear auditorium space for offices.

Cohasset residents who attended the meeting strongly expressed their concern that the Town Hall remain a historic landmark and a center for community gatherings and activities.

R.M. Campbell stated his sentiments clearly: "to destroy the auditorium in whole or in part is a terrible shame. The hall is irreplacable," he added. "It can never be returned to its original state."

Campbell noted that Cohasset is "not in the upper brackets of community spirit . . . but the Town Hall is the thing that keeps some semblance of this spirit."

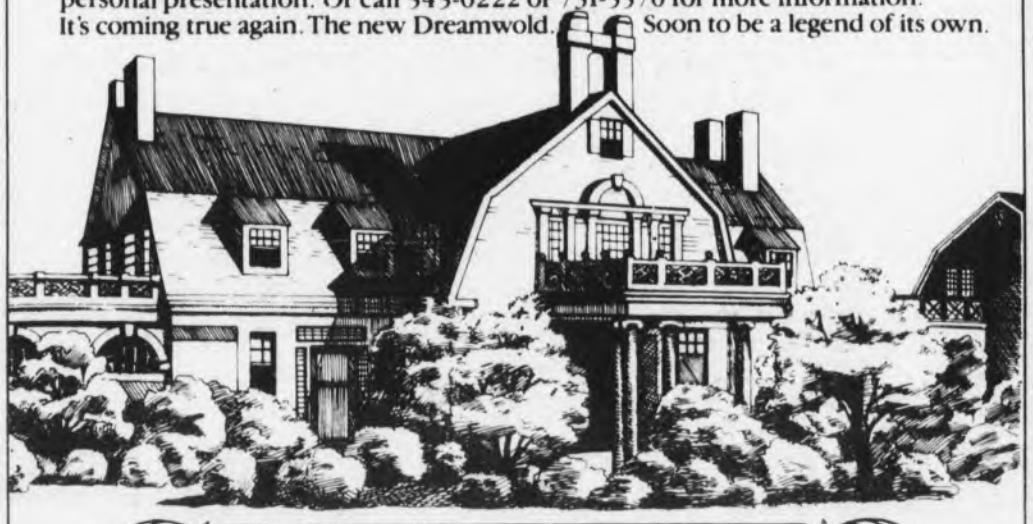
David Wadsworth, a member of the Cohasset Historical Commission, pointed out that it would be a "shame to lose the unique function" of the traditional New England Town Hall as a center for community activity. The Town Hall "ought to be retained for that reason," he added. Wadsworth advised the study Committee to start building at the rear of the hall using modern concepts and preserve the building as it exists now for community activities.

Members of the Dramatic Club, which frequently uses the town hall for rehearsals and production, emphasized the value of the building for the community. Scott Ketcham stated that "the school is not an alternative for recreational activities." He explained that it has been extremely difficult in the past to schedule rehearsal time at the high school because of the many activities the school itself sponsors.

Like many of the churches in town, the town hall is occupied five, sometimes six days out of the week; without the hall several group gatherings and activities could not take place.

A concern existed among many residents as to the actual space required for town offices. The Study Committee could not give precise square footage, but committee member Dave Terry explained that the existing offices were in need of renovation and that additional space was needed to house all of the town offices including the offices now in the Bates building. A modern vault system and an elevator for the handicapped must also be installed.

Another proposed solution to the inadequate town office space was presented by Fire Chief Dooley who recommended that the current fire station be turned into the town hall and a new, larger station be built. Dooley argued that the existing station offered more than adequate parking facilities and could be expanded to house all of the town offices on one floor.



"I don't think my idea is that far fetched," Dooley stated. Shuffling sideways towards the committee, Dooley demonstrated what he believed are inadequate space and facilities in the station for the equipment and six firefighters residing there.

Several people present at the meeting did not accept this idea because of their desire to preserve the location of the town hall in the center of town. City planner Burk Ketcham felt that the building should be retained as a town hall and not exclusively as an office building. The plan for an addition "makes the most sense," Ketcham explained, because the addition will "leave room for recreational activities" within the town hall.

The next step for the Study Committee will be to review considerations and factors presented by the public and then return to the Board of Selectmen and present recommendations to that board. Proposed recommendations include: an addition to the town hall with adequate access to the second floor of the hall, handicapped facilities, an elevator, and vault system be installed in the new addition; and offices on the second floor be brought up to "modern standards". The Study Committee promised to weigh heavily the views of Cohasset residents in their recommendations for renovations of Town Hall office space.

Ambulance purchase may take many more months the vehicle currently has more than 60,000 road miles, "and God knows how many engine miles." He added the town should have investigated the purchase of a new ambulance three years ago.

According to invoices recorded in the Town Accountant's office, since the June special Town Meeting, the town has paid for several repairs to the ambulance. The two most recent repairs made to the ambulance this month will probably cost the town about $2000, according to Chief Dooley.

According to the Town Accountant's records, there is only $1742 left in the town's motor vehicle repair and maintenance account for this fiscal year, and the October ambulance repairs will probably eat away more than that total. A budgetary transfer may be the only way in which the most recent repair bills will be paid, the accountant's office staff stated.

In August, the town expended $695.00 for a rebuilt transmission; and one week later spent $183.71 for battery and terminal repairs.

Aug. 9, the town spent $677.64 to repair a transmission leak, fix the tail pipe, and to complete several other repairs. Invoices for any September and October repairs have not yet been filed with the accountant's office.

Chief Dooley said it may be several months before the town receives a new ambulance. The Fire Department has recommended the purchase of a Wheel Coach chassis, which, he noted, was available when the bids were returned to the town in the summer. Chief Dooley does not know, although he doubts, whether the Florida-based manufacturer which returned the lowest-priced bid, has that same chassis available now. That would mean another several-month wait before a new vehicle is brought to Cohasset.

An informed source has indicated the ambulance "is on its last legs." The Cohasset Fire Department has, at different intervals, been forced to call for mutual aid to transport a patient to South Shore Hospital because the Cohasset vehicle was unable to continue the trip.

"People don't realize the terrible shape their ambulance is in," the source stated.

"About three weeks ago the department received a call from South Main Street, and began to transport the patient to the hospital. But when the ambulance got onto Route 3A the EMT's were so concerned with the operation of their vehicle, they requested Scituate to transport the patient the remainder of the way," according to the source.

"It's now a question of safety. Can we transport our patients safely? And how long can we transport them safely?"

Town stalled in watershed bylaw

Although several people expressed their support of S.E.A. Consultants, many others, including selectman Frank England, were concerned about a matter the engineering firm had openly discussed with the Water Commissioners several weeks before.

As related by S.E.A. senior engineer Paul Ross, the company had been contracted in 1976 by James Tyeryar, the former owner of Cohasset Heights landfill, to complete an operational plan for the proposed dump site. At that time, Ross had assured the owner the landfill was not within the parameters of a watershed area.

The Zoning Board of Appeals had also determined at that time the landfill was not within the watershed and allowed its operation, Ross added. But in 1979 the state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE) closed down the operation after finding disposal of materials had occurred outside the legally-defined landfill limits.

Ross stated his company has had no connection with the landfill since the early 1980's, and was subsequently brought to court by the former owner, who blamed S.E.A. for the shutdown and loss of income.

At the same time, Ross said, his firm was working with the Town of Cohasset, helping to design the Aaron River Reservoir.

Since that time, the town has maintained the Cohasset Heights landfill, now under a different ownership, is within the watershed district. Ross stated last week it remained his opinion that the landfill is not located in the district.

In a related matter, Camp, Dresser and McKee are currently under contract with the water commissioners to determine if leachate is flowing from the landfill into the town's water supply, and if that substance is contaminated.

Selectman England and several other officials were skeptical of whether S.E.A. could remain neutral on the landfill issue, should the subject ever arise. If a new developer wants to build upon land within the watershed, there is a possibility he could legally challenge S.E.A.'s previous determination about its boundaries.

The second engineering proposal was made by Camp, Dresser and McKee, a firm many town officials felt was too inexperienced in developing watershed bylaws. The concern has been expressed previously, and CDM came prepared with a rebuttal last week.

After reading in the Patriot Ledger about the watershed advisory committee's concern, CDM submitted a supplementary proposal in which they added a consultant who would assist in the preparation of the bylaw.

Myron Rosenberg, an engineer with CDM, explained that Phillip Herr Associates of Boston would be helping to draft the official watershed bylaw. Official, however, expressed their concerns that this matter was not part of CDM's original presentation, and about the cost incurred by an extra consultant.

As selectman England explained at the conclusion of the company's presentation, "it doesn't look like CDM would give us the nuts and bolts of what we want."

In the meantime, Assistant Town Counsel John Slater is preparing an interim proposal which would ban all new construction within the watershed area. Officials hope to have the construction moratorium developed while an official survey is being conducted by an engineering firm, subsequent to the formation of a permanent watershed protection bylaw.

Cohasset Scouting news

Pack meeting: The first pack meeting will be held Oct. 24, at 7 p.m. at the Deer Hill School cafeteria. It will be a Halloween party. All boys and other siblings come in costume.

Uniforms: If any former Boy Scout or Cub Scout has a uniform or any part of one that he no longer needs, please donate it to Pack #38 or Troop #28 by calling Jane Long 383-1281, or Nancy McLaughlin 383-0167.

Leader Materials: If any former den leader or committee member has any books, flags, or materials that can be used by our new leaders, please call Jane Long 383-1281 or Nancy McLaughlin 383-0167.

District: The Cohasset Cub Scouts Pack No. 38 is a member of the Old Mills District Old Colony Council. The District consists of ten towns including: Abington, Cohasset, Hanover, Hanson, Hingham, Hull, Norwell, Rockland, Scituate and Whitman.

District Meetings: There is a District Meeting held once a month, the first Wednesday 7:30 to 9:30 a.m., usually at the So. Jr. High School, Rte. 228 in Hingham. Here all the Den leaders and other members meet to exchange ideas. All parents interested are always invited to the meeting. The news of current Scouting events, etc. are discussed.

Uniforms: The new Cub Scouts will need: Cub Scout BSA navy blue shirt; neckerchief (color depending on year scout-- Wolf (yellow), Bear (blue), Webelo (red plaid); Slide (gold colored neckerchief slide with Cub Scout Emblem); Patches: Old Mills District, U.S. Flag Emblem, Den Numerals (depends on Den assigned), Pack Numeral (#38); Blue and Gold Cub Scout Hat; Navy blue slacks (Boys can buy official Cub Scout slacks or can wear regular neat and clean navy slacks.); Cub Scout Belt (usually worn with the official Cub Scout navycolored slacks.)

Some of the local stores that carry the Official Boy Scouts of America Cub Scout clothes and accessories are: Gates in No. Scituate, Sears, Bargain Center Quincy (has shirts) and Woolworth's in Boston.

Pack Meetings: All the Dens meet once a month at 7 p.m. at the Deer Hill School for a Pack Meeting, coordinated by the Cub Master. This serves to unify all the Dens. The meeting begins with an orderly flag presentation ceremony, an inspection, and announcements. After this, the dens share their ideas, show projects, do skits, etc., with the group. The parents are asked to accompany the Cub Scout to the Pack meeting so they can help to encourage and share the Cubs participation with the group and can become informed of Scouting activities.

Each family is asked to donate four hours a year to the Pack if they aren't a Den leader. A committee list is available for volunteers or it will be assigned as needed.

Committee Meetings: All the Den leaders and parents meet with the Cub Master and Merle Brown to plan and discuss group organization and functions, etc. The Committee Meetings are held at the Unitarian Parish House at 7:30 - 8:30 p.m., the Sunday prior to the Wednesday Pack Meeting.

Travel Along with Evie Young
AFTER DEREGULATION
Deregulation has proven to be a boon for travelers. Before 1978, the Civil Aeronautics Board controlled fares and routes. Consumers who wanted to fly from big city to big city could choose among airlines which all charged identical fares. Passengers traveling between smaller cities often had no choice at all, usually one airline with one fare. Under deregulation, however, consumers can now choose among several airlines and from among several "discount" fares. The emergence of small, lowcost airlines has meant drastic price cuts on many routes. The ease with which community and regional airlines can enter new markets has improved service to smaller cities. These changes, coupled with no-cost-to-the-consumer travel agent service, make the skies seem friendly indeed.
Don't pass up that holiday trip this year. There's still time to make plans. It is wise to plan early, securing air passage before airlines become booked. At COLPITTS TRAVEL CENTER, we are here to save you time, aggravation and money by making all your travel arangements for you. Whether making emergency travel plans or planning for a future trip, we're here to offer you the finest in professional travel service. We are conveniently located at 3 Brook St., Scituate. Our office is open to serve you Mon.-Fri. 9-5; Sat. 10-4 and by appointment. Most major credit cards honored. Tel. 545-4500 and 383-1717.
TRAVEL TIP
Cairo may well be the world's most interesting city.

around town

☐ Three students from Cohasset were among the approximately 1,050 students entering the freshman class as Dartmouth College began its 215 academic year here in September.

Kathryn A. Corbett, daughter of Paul and Eileen Corbett of 266 South Main St., is a 1984 graduate of Cohasset High School where she was president of the National Honor Society. The recipient of numerous academic awards throughout high school, she also was active on the school's field hockey and track teams.

John B. Replogle, son of David and Jeanne Replogle of 70 Fairoaks Lane, is also a 1984 graduate of Cohasset High School. He was a member of the National Honor Society and received recognition for outstanding achievement in scholarship. Active in the school's student government, he also was a member of its varsity soccer and golf teams.

James J. Rooney, son of Paul and Mary Rooney of 60 Lantern Lane, is a 1984 graduate of Cohasset High School. He was a member of the national Honor Society, was treasurer of his class and was active on the school's soccer and golf teams.

☐ Hunneman and Company/Better Homes and Gardens proudly announces that Barb Weisenfluh of Cohasset is the recipient of the Medallion Club certificate, having achieved a residential sales volume of over $1 million dollars for the calendar year of 1984. The award was presented by Saul B. Cohen, President of Hunneman and Company, at a recent Sales Associates meeting held at the Holiday Inn in Woburn.

☐ Congratulations are in order for Joe Hoffman, who made the Boston College Hockey Team a few weeks ago. Saw him

Sometimes it hurts so bad to be good. That's the price Kenny Leahy has had to pay to be a great gymnast driving through town, without a hair on his head! An initiation that all of the "rookies" go through, it really turns out to be a badge of distinction when people realize what the reason is for having it. Joe makes another reason to go to the B.C. hockey games, it will be fun to see two "Cohassetites" on the team! Good work, Joe!

☐ Speaking of sports and college, Mike Cunning is a member of the Water Polo team at the University of Mass. at Amherst. Mike was in town last weekend, his team had played Harvard. Mike reports that the team is number 3 in their league, and they are mighty proud of it.

☐ Jamie Cameron turned 16 last week, and really had a grand celebration in store for him. . . his Dad surprised him with two tickets to the World Series, and they went! The game that they attended was held in Detroit, one of the "craziest" stadiums in the U.S., and they had a great time. It certainly is one birthday that Jamie won't forget, happy sixteenth Jamie.

☐ I was shown a recent picture of Mike Mahoney, sitting atop a tank in uniform in Germany . . . he reports that all is well with him, and that he is getting to be a real world traveller (his leaves are spent going all over Europe). Everyone misses Mike like crazy, especially that great sense of humor and super smile.

☐ Linda O'Laughlin spent a weekend playing in a tennis tournament last week. It was held in Connecticut, and was a great one. Linda made it to the finals, very good indeed, but had to take herself out of the competition after spraining her ankle. Here's hoping for a better outcome next time, right Linda.

☐ CHS had a grand week last week, topped off by a weekend full of winning sports . . . soccer team beat Scituate and the football team won. Ingrid Anderson was crowned as the homecoming queen, and she and Jay made a handsome pair riding around the field in their "chariot". The dance was the finish to a nice day, and a good time was had by all.

☐ Speaking of the homecoming dance, while going through some old photos I came across a picture of another "King", Paul Farren. He was the king in 1978, just look at him now! His name was mentioned a lot during the football game on Sunday. From king to football pro. . .

☐ Don't forget that October 22 is the last day for reserving your seat for the Testimonial Dinner that will be held for Gordon Flint on Nov. 2. The dinner is going to be held at the South Shore Country Club . . . Mr. Flint officially retired Oct. 1, and that ends a 33 year "stint" as the town treasurer-collector. It's hard to believe his warm greeting won't be there after making those stairs!!

☐ The Community Center is having their annual meeting next week, Oct. 25 to be exact. Everyone is invited to attend. They welcome any help and/or input you may have, so give a hand and support them.

☐ The National Honor Society is selling "painters hats" that say Cohasset Skippers on them, and the Boosters Club is selling turtlenecks with Cohasset written on them . . .every loyal Skipper fan should wear them, and it will be fun to attend an event with everyone dressed in them. Plus, it shows real spirit, something that was started at the high school last week and should go on forever.

☐ Happy birthday to Tara Stanford.

☐ The Jimmy Fund Golf Tournament made the most money they have ever made, and are extremely proud of their efforts. The committee would also like to thank the gals responsible for the best raffle yet, as it was a huge part of the money-raising venture. A hefty check will be presented to the Jimmy Fund, and those in charge as well as those who supported it should given themselves a pat on the back.

☐ Keep the news coming!

Town vs. state

The Cohasset Water Commission is probably the busiest board in town. With the watershed protection district, the Cohasset Heights study and the construction moratorium on the agenda, this commission has a heavy load to carry.

All these issues are of vital concern to the present and future residents of out town. Perhaps there are not more important situations confronting us at this time.

Speaking of heavy issues, who would have suspected that Wompatuck State Park, "that green jewel in the midst of civilation", would be the dumping ground for toxic wastes? It's another duty for the Water Commissions to ensure that these wastes are removed properly, and that it is never repeated. Here goes Cohasset pitted against the Big, Bad State again.

But the Water Commissioners are poised for the fight. They are unanimous in their determination to protect the town's watershed, be it a ban against present and future construction, or a policy prohibiting the storage of any chemical wastes near our precious water supply.

As Commissioner Peter Pratt has asked, "Why can the state get away with dumping PCB's and other toxic wastes when a private business would be crucified?" It makes one wonder.

And who is responsible for bringing these highly-poisonous wastes into the best preserve of natural environment we have in this area? There are several thoughts about that, but it is unlikely anyone will be brought forward and publically chastised for causing mayhem with our natural resources and water supply.

The Water Commissioners, together with town and state officials, must form policies and ensure their compliance, so another near-disaster will not only be averted, but will be an impossibility.

News and photos

The Mariner depends on you for our source of community information. We appreciate everyone who has deposited club, town or school news for publication in the Mariner.

The local drop off points include Cohasset News store on Brook Street, and the Cohasset Colonial Pharmacy. Just ask the clerk to deposit your news item in the Mariner box.

The earlier you get the news item into the drop off point, the better are our chances of getting it into the paper the following week.

Everyone should submit their news by Tuesday at 1 p.m. for publication in Thursday's edition. That is the latest the news items will be picked up for the next edition.

We will also accept any items that come directly to us via the mail, or are dropped off at our main office in Marshfield.

As for photographs, anyone who would like a photograph which was published in the Mariner, may pick up the glossy the following Monday at the Cohasset Community Center. The center charges a nominal fee for the photo, with proceeds going to the center.

Madam Zolar tells it all

By Claire McDonough

Great news, all you Zodiophiles out there! The Sun is conjunct Mercury, and both of them sextile Neptune, and I guess you know what that means.

If you have a book, play, biography, or TV script in you, this is the time. Of course, all that changes in two days, so you'd better write fast. Also, there is that pesky Mars-Pluto aspect.

Well, anyway, I asked Madam Zolar how we can best express ourselves under current planetary aspects that so encourage creativity and here's what she told me.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Take advantage of every possible opportunity to bully, dominate, and compel obedience from your friends this week. Just be aware that when the planets move on you will find yourself with an incredible number of enemies. Ignore them. They will have too many problems of their own to effectively seek revenge for at least two months.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Taureans tend to be earthy, stubborn, and non-believers in astrology. Therefore I won't bother telling you about the lottery you could win if you knew which day to play it. Tough luck, Taurus.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): You will have difficulty deciding which of your personalities to express. I suggest that you make up your mind as soon as possible, as you cannot go through life not sure whether you want to be a cop or a robber.

CANCER (June 22 to July 21): Cancerians are commonly known as Moon Children. This does not mean you should take the term "moon" in its more vulgar sense. Consider writing an astrology column for a local newspaper.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): Telling a Leo to express himself is somewhat like telling Harold Stassen he should run for president. Your only problem will be that all the other signs are currently too busy expressing themselves to give your performance the attention you feel it deserves.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): Okay, Virgo, go ahead, express yourself. Clean out all the closets, tidy your dresser drawers, rearrange the cupboards, then tell all the people you know what slobs they are. Now, don't you feel better?

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): Self expression for Libras is always difficult, as you have so much trouble deciding what you want to express. As usual, you are torn between matrimony and macrame.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21): This is a marvelous time for Scorpios to engage in deceit and mystification. If you would really like to confuse a maximum number of people, try taking the return envelopes from all your junk mail, and send the material from one to another. For example, the person wanting to sell you a condominium gets a request for a political donation, the politician gets an ad for an encyclopedia, the encyclopedia salesman gets an invitation from a health spa. If the envelopes aren't stamped, send them anyway. The postage won't be your problem.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): Self-expression is more fun for Sagittarians than just about anybody. You could stand on a street corner and act weird, or you could follow a Virgo around and mess up her cupboards.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): A good time to ruthlessly crush any of your business rivals, write a trilogy on soil erosion, or enter a yawning festival. You pick it.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): The means of self expression open to Aquarians are unlimited. However, this is a family newspaper, and most of them are illegal. You're on your own, Aquarian. Just try not to express yourself too vigorously.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): Ah, Pisces. Sweet, sensitive, artistic, easily dominated Pisces. You will have a very full month. An Aries will push you around, a Taurus will sell you an expired lottery ticket, a Gemini will either rob or arrest you, a Cancer will try to sell you an astrology column, a Leo will try to impress you, a Virgo will tell you you are a slob, a Libra will offer you your choice of matrimony or macrame, a Scorpio will mail you an invitation to join a health spa, with postage due, a Sagittarian will approach you and act weird, a Capricorn will do something ruthless to you, and an Aquarian will ask you to do heavens knows what. You will love every minute of it.

NOTE TO ALL SIGNS: An unscrupulous sun sign astrologer will try to deceive you. Pay no attention. She's just in a foul because someone got her Capricorn.

Globe article was a real sleeper

To the Editor:

Globe reporter Peter Sleeper didn't adequately identify two individuals he recently interviewed for a Cohasset sewage article.

Sleeper identified Charles DeSantis as "leader of the skeptics." Perhaps a sleepy copy editor, or a sleepy Sleeper forgot to include the fact that DeSantis is Chairman of the Cohasset Sewer Commission, overwhelmingly elected to the position in 1983, elected the Cohasset Mariner's "Person of the Year" in 1984 by citizens' write-in votes. Last spring, at Annual Town Meeting, the DeSantis Ward Sewage Plan won by a 9-1 vote.

Sleeper's interpretation of the above is that the town is "polarized," over DeSantis, over the Ward Plan.

Sleeper identifies Murray Campbell as "an advocate of nuclear power." This is correct, but hardly an insight into the man.

Campbell has no elected or appointed capacity in the Town of Cohasset. He has told many people he is a paid lobbiest for New England Nuclear Group, but the State House Registry does not include him as a paid lobbiest. According to Campbell, he is a Vice President at Stone and Webster. But when you call Stone and Webster and ask how to reach him, or what his title is, they give you a box number in Boston and advise: "No title."

Is Campbell a paid hack, as he claims, or a self-styled lobbyist? Does his relationship with Stone and Webster give us a clue? Nuclear power plants, which S & W used to build, are no longer thought to be a wise thing to construct. Stone & Webster is now back into sewage treatment plants. Is it possible Campbell believes more in his pay check than in sewage treatment plants?

In addition, Campbell has no vote at town meeting, annual town elections or federal elections. He is a Canadian citizen and has not (as of this writing) adopted the country he wishes to build large sewer plants in.

I would like to caution the Globe, in the future, to have reporters properly identify the persons they interview, for the public's edification and for the Globe's own information. Sometimes, when we know an individual's citizenship and employer, we are able to better self-edit what the individuals are telling us.

As far as I'm concerned, Peter Sleeper blew it. I sincerely hope he tries again.

Senator wants land

(This letter was written to James Coleman, regional director of the National Park Service, from Sen. Allan McKinnon. Ed.)

Dear Mr. Coleman:

I am writing to urge you to reconsider the Commonwealth of Massachusetts' application for the entire surplus acreage at the U.S. Army Reserve Center, GSA #D-MA-775, Hingham-Cohasset, reference S7417 (MAR)PD.

I feel the Town of Cohasset's request is in the best interest of the citizens of the South Shore and I strongly endorse their proposal.

Sincerely yours,
Allan R. McKinnon

Perfect attendance

To the Editor:

I have just recently had the opportunity to review membership attendance records for the Massachusetts House of Representatives for the first six months of 1984.

During this period there were an astounding 400 recorded roll calls.

I am writing this letter to publicly congratulate Representative Mary Jeanette Murray of Cohasset for attaining an enviable 100 percent roll call attendance record during that six months.

Representative Murray has certainly demonstrated an exemplary personal commitment to the residents of the Third Plymouth district.

Commission reviews car dealership, health care facility

Although it shouldn't have been, the Conservation Commission was the first town board to review plans for the proposed car dealership at the corner of Sohier Street and Chief Justice Cushing Highway.

The commission met Tuesday night with an attorney and engineer representing Joseph Abbi-Ezzi, who is planning to purchase the land, conditioned on the approval to build the proposed Ford dealership.

Abbi-Ezzi was represented by Atty. Gregory Sullivan of Hingham who temporarily replaced Atty. Michael Sullivan of Scituate.

It was quickly noted that Atty. Michael Sullivan should have applied for other town permits prior to the conservation hearing. John Modzelewski, an engineer representing the commission, stated that the Board of Health and Planning Board must be notified of the proposal prior to the Conservation Commission review.

It was decided that Atty. Sullivan would apply to all necessary review boards, and come back to the Conservation Commission Oct. 29 for a continuation of its notice of intent.

The prospective owner hopes to locate a Ford dealership on land located at the corner of Sohier Street and Route 3A on property surrounding the Mobil station.

Although Atty. Sullivan told the commission members the proposed plan would not adversely affect the surrounding wetlands, Modzelewski had some doubts. There is scheduled to be some filling of the wetlands which border the property.

Commission members reminded engineer Don Gaquin of Perkins Engineering, that any wetlands filled in by construction, must be replaced elsewhere. That would be a difficult puzzle to solve, Modzelewski stated. It might mean reducing the scale of the dealership or the parking spaces provided within the plan.

The drainage system, as proposed by engineer Gaquin, might also be adversely affected by the system proposed across the street by developer Donald Staszko. Commission members urged the engineer to contact Staszko engineers and compare drainage systems and locations.

Atty. Sullivan said it was Abbi-Ezzi's intention to construct a dealership which would be in compliance with all local regulations, without the need of a any variances.

Modzelewski, whowill be meeting with Gaquin in the interim, also stated that the septic system must comply with the Board of Health's Title Five regulations. That was not shown on the present set of plans, he added.

In another brief hearing, the commission met with the proposed developers of a 162-bed long term health care facility on Turkey Hill Lane near the Hingham border.

David Dunlap, architect and president of Dunlap Associates of Norwell, explained that although construction will not interfere with any wetlands, they thought the commission should have the opportunity to review the plans.

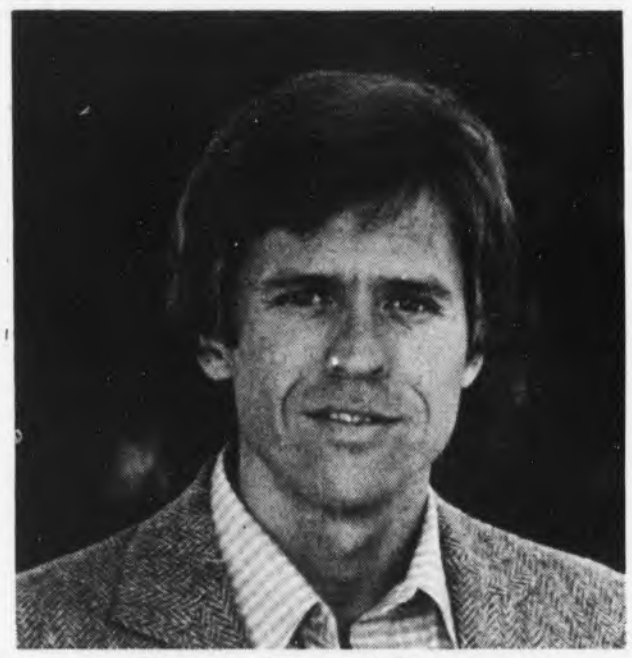
Commission members, who have walked the proposed location at the former Nike ammunition depot site, agreed the development would not affect the wetlands in the rear of the 5.7 acre property.

The two-story facility will be known as the Waterford, Dunlap explained. The facility will utilize the septic system presently on the site, once used by the military barracks on the land.

Commission members, noting that Dunlap has to appear before the Planning Board and Board of Health for final approval, said they would like to review final topographic maps to determine how development will impact the drainage, especially to the rear of the property.

Hingham resident Joseph Saponaro, who owns most of the land adjacent to the proposed development, also attended the meeting. Although he voiced no objections Tuesday night, he intended to make commissioners aware of the drainage ditch along the rear of the property which he said may become increasingly full with more development.

New Baptist minister



Pastor Daniel Brodeur will be walking door to door this week in his effort to begin a Baptist Church here.

The recent graduate of Andover-Newton Seminary in Newton, Pastor Brodeur said his demographic studies of the area concluded there is a need for such a church in Cohasset. The Cohasset Baptist Church is sponsored by Victory Baptist Church in Marshfield and Calvary Baptist Church in Dedham.

In addition to his door to door visitations, Pastor Brodeur and his wife, Laurie, will be holding community Bible studies and beginning a Sunday Worship Service. The time and place of these activities will be announced soon.

A native of Nashua, N.H., Pastor Brodeur is currently residing in Hanover, although he intends to relocate in Cohasset.

Any communications may be sent to the Cohasset Baptist Church, P.O. Box 1, Cohasset, Mass. 02025.

Thanks to Murray

(This letter was sent to Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray from the Director of Citizens for Limited Taxation. Ed.)

Dear Rep. Murray:

Thank you for voting three times this year to cut the double tax on so called "unearned income" and return some of the state surplus to the taxpayer. Even though your colleagues did not vote to override the governor's veto of this legislative tax cut, we at Citizens for Limited Taxation appreciate your consistent effort to give us some of our money back instead of further increasing the long-term state tax burden.

Slater outlines watershed options

Assistant Town Counsel John Slater, who has been advising selectmen and other town boards concerned with the protection of the town's water supply, stated this week there are several methods the town may utilize to preserve the watershed area.

This question to which many committees and boards have sought answers, will be discussed in length at a special selectmen's meeting Thursday, Oct. 25 at 7:30 p.m. in Town Hall.

In a memorandum to selectmen Oct. 10, Atty. Slater outlined several responses the town may make to the developments proposed in the watershed area. The most important element in establishing a legal defense against such future development, he stated, is for the town to hire a qualified and experienced engineering firm to define the extent of the area to be protected.

Once that is accomplished, the town will then have a legally-defined area in which protective measures may be established.

Although an engineering firm was to be selected last week, Water Commissioners, upon recommendations from other town officials, decided to invite other companies to make presentations. It will be several weeks before an engineering firm will be chosen to complete the watershed protection district map.

It is expected that after the map is outlined, a specific bylaw, which would prohibit construction within that defined area, will be developed. Such a restrictive bylaw will need the approval of Town Meeting.

In his outline to selectmen this week, Atty. Slater mentioned several options the town may pursue to preserve this water supply area. One option would be to develop and adopt a zoning bylaw which "may prohibit certain uses within the district or allow other uses only with a special permit."

The Board of Health may also impose certain stringent restrictions under its jurisdiction. For example, Atty. Slater explained, the board may increase the lot size requirements for septic systems or the setback requirements from sources of water supply, or increase the minimum distance between the septic system and the maximum groundwater elevation.

The town may also enact a general bylaw prohibiting or regulating certain activities within the district, such as the control of hazardous and toxic materials; or the planning board may restrict development through the promulgation of regulations pursuant to the Subdivision Control Law; or the town could enact a general wetlands protection bylaw in addition to the present state law.

As Atty. Slater commented, "with respect to interim water supply protection, there appear to be two principal measures available to the Town. The first would involve the enactment of a building moratorium as an amendment to the Zoning Bylaw. The second would involve the enactment by the Board of Health of regulations supplementary to Title 5."

As he later explained however, the moratorium may not be a completely effective method to prohibit all types of construction. Chapter 40A, Section 6 protects those "non conforming" structures or uses which lawfully within the district prior to a public hearing to discuss enactment of a zoning law.

The assistant Town Counsel did note, however, that there are other legal means, including the Massachusetts Clean Water Act, by which the town may address existing threats to the town's water supply.

It takes total concentration to perform gymnastics, as is shown on the stern faces of Laurie Cordrey and Andrea Freeman at the CCC gymnastic class (Rose Cundari)

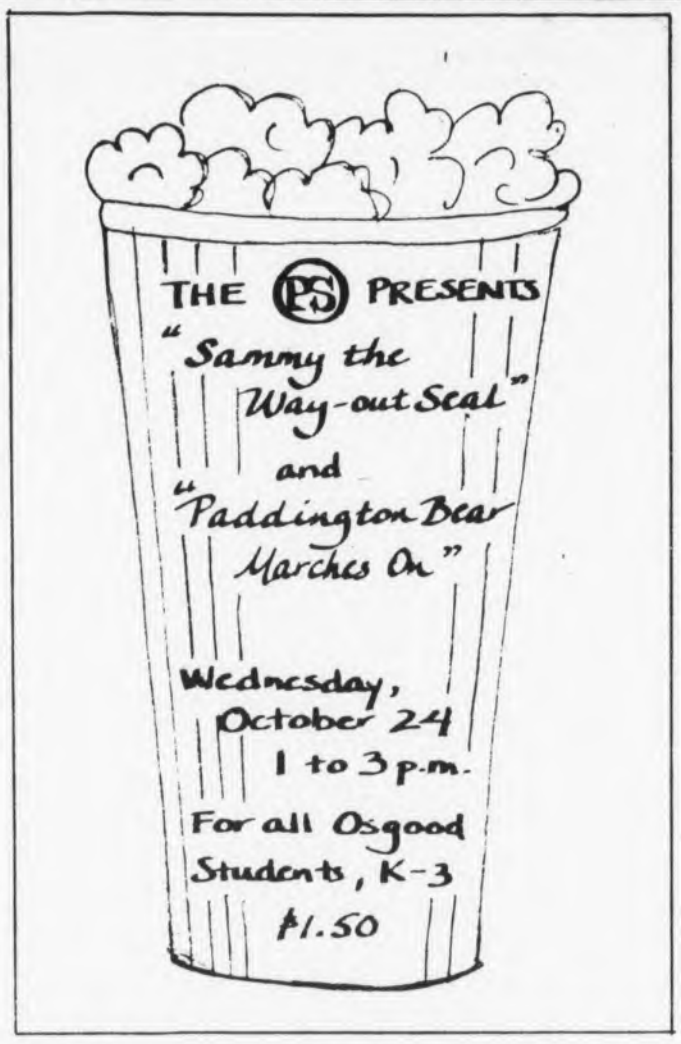
Field Trip:

The downpours of last Tuesday, Oct. 2 did not deter the 10th grade American Studies classes from completing their annual field trip to examine the buildings of St. Stephen's and the First Parish in Cohasset.



The purpose of this tour was to compare the typical Anglican and Early American architecture that reflects not only the different religious values, but also the economic and social ones. Fortunately, the contrast between the churches is so marked that students can easily understand the perspective points of view.

The American Studies team wishes to thank all those involved from both churches for allowing the high school students to take advantage of these significant community resources.

However, in the second half, Cohasset outhustled the Sailors for the triumph. Chris Kirkendall once again had an excellent game. Kevin Henry came in for the injured Kevin Dunn at fullback and played outstandingly. David MacDonald also turned in a good game, controlling Cohasset's offense during the second half.

Monday, Cohasset will take on a tough Rockland team. Wednesday, Cohasset will play Middleboro in Cohasset, and Friday, East Bridgewater will come to Cohasset. Coach Jon Anderson feels the next couple weeks will be crucial ones for Cohasset and believes it is too early to make any predictions concerning the state tournament.

Varsity Girls' Field Hockey

Wednesday, Hanover defeated Cohasset, 1 to 0. Hanover scored with two minutes left in the game. Cohasset, however, played their best game of the season. Defensively, Maria Cahill, Lee Sullivan, and Jill Shockman were very impressive. Offensively, Maureen Farren also played well.

Friday, Cohasset was successful against Middleboro, 1 to 0. Cindy Spooner received a pass from Kara MacDonald, drove past two defenders and the goalie, to score the only goal in the contest. Fullback Lee Sullivan played very well, and Maria Cahill also turned in a good effort for Cohasset.

Tuesday, Cohasset will take on Abington. Thursday, Cohasset will travel to East Bridgewater and try to beat the Bulldogs.

Varsity Boys' Football

Saturday, Cohasset clobbered Holbrook, 41 to 6. This game provided a good opportunity for everyone on the team to participate in the Homecoming Game. Cohasset looked very strong throughout the entire game.

Floyd Hardwick scored Cohasset's first touchdown on a 40-yard punt return. Danny Curran was then set up by Mark Lahive's fake, and scored on a 23-yard run. Lahive earned the next touchdown off a two-yard run followed by Jackie Cooper, who scored on a four-yard pass from Troy Chatterton. Jackie then scored on a 50-yard pass from Troy, and finally, Tom Durkin scored on an eight-yard run. Bobby Durkin kicked five extra points for Cohasset from six touchdowns. Bobby has only missed one extra point attempt the whole season.

Coach Phil Pisano feels much credit must go to his offensive line, consisting of Jay Contis, Jeff Brown, Jeff Soltesz, Jeff Lydon, and Liam Stanford. These boys blew out Holbrooks defense and allowed Cohasset to establish their running game for the first time.

Board of health approves system for Cohasset Plaza

Donald Stazsko is one step closer to starting site preparation work at his Cohasset Plaza shopping complex on Route 3A. The Board of Health approved septic system for the complex Monday, Oct. 15, after careful examination of the two part system.

Engineer Bruce Wait explained to board members that two separate systems will be constructed: one for the supermarket and another for the five dry goods stores and bank.

Because the market will sit directly on top of wetland area, a pump must be installed to move the sewage. Chairman Michael Bliss stated that he would like to see a notation in the plans to include an emergency generator as a back-up system to operate the pump if the electric system fails.

Both septic systems will be installed underneath the parking lot in the front of the building. The system for the supermarket is designed to drain into the swamp behind the building. Bruce Wait promised that this swamp will be made into a "nice looking pond." The system for the other stores and bank will drain into a retention area behind Cohasset Motors.

Member Barbara Kern stated that John Madzelewski, the town engineer, must look over the plans from the Board of Health's point of view, even though Modzelewski had previously reviewed the plans for the Conservation Commission.

The Board of Health will take the matter under advisement pending Modzelewski's review and a deposit of $1000 from Donald Stazsko. If the Planning Board approves Stazsko's plans Wednesday, Oct. 24, and if he obtains a superceding order from the DEQE to override Jane Cooke's appeal to prevent construction, Stazsko will begin site work for Cohasset Plaza immediately.

In other business, Wheelwright Farm representatives Atty. Roberta Sawyer and developer Wayne Sawchuk obtained their last necessary permits after meeting with the Board of Health Monday, Oct. 15.

Atty. Roberta Sawyer explained to the members of the Board of Health that the communal septic system will be the responsibility of the Wheelwright Farm trust. The trust will provide the funds to "repair and maintain" the system including "pipes, plumbing and leaching beds." In compliance with John Madzelewski's requirements, engineer Donald Springhetti placed the leaching field at a "minimum of fifty feet" from the clusters.

The Board of Health will approve Wheelwright Farm's septic system upon receipt of a $1000 deposit for the development. All plans were stamped and signed by the members of the Board of Health and Health Agent Joseph Godzik. Site preparation work for the cluster development will begin Tuesday, Oct. 16.

Hunger is a problem even close to home. The Quincy Crisis Center and its director, Esther Sanger, have been featured on TV for their food service for homeless people in Quincy. Mrs. Sanger will tell us about the Center at a special meeting at 11:10 a.m. in Walton Rogers Hall, St. Stephen's Church. What can we do about hunger? Come and find out!

"A World Beyond War" - A recent poll found that 75% of teenagers expect to die in nuclear war. Is war inevitable? What can we do to prevent it? If these questions trouble you, you are invited to attend the Beyond War presentation Thursday, Oct. 18 at 7:30 p.m. in Bates Hall. Neither a political event nor a scare tactic, the meeting will present positive ideas about changing the world's mind concerning war.

Hallowe'en Potluck - Our postponed picnic has turned into a Church Family Halloween Party. It will be Saturday, Oct. 27 at 5:30 p.m. See next week's Good News for details about what to bring. The supper will honor Church School teachers, our C.E. Committee, and last year's C.E. Director, Scott Fischer. Plan to attend!

Confirmation Class - High School students who have not been confirmed as members of the church are invited to enroll in the Confirmation Class. Led by Rev. Benbow, the class will explore issues in the Bible, religious understanding, and decision-making. It will meet regularly from October until May, though the schedule will depend upon the participants. The first Confirmation Class meeting will be Sunday, Oct. 21. If you wish to enroll, please attend church at 10 a.m. and go to Rev. Benbow's office at 11:15. The meeting will end by 12:30.

Cohasset honored for eight years of safety

The towns of Scituate, Cohasset and Norwell were among 54 communities in Eastern Massachusetts honored last week for pedestrian safety in 1983.

At an AAA awards breakfast at the Sheraton Tara in Braintree, Scituate was honored for nine years without a pedestrian fatality; Cohasset for eight years, and Norwell for two.

Cohasset's safety officer Cliff Jones thinks the citizens of Cohasset "are extremely safety-minded," a fact which has helped in compiling the town's record of no fatalities for nearly a decade.

"We do our part in going into the schools," he added, and presenting traffic safety programs. He says he's gratified when he sees schoolchildren obeying safety rules on the town's roads a day or two after he's conducted a program.

Theodore A. Baldwin, Norwell's safety officer, thinks residents there are willing to take responsibility for their own safety. The fact that schoolchildren are bused, and the presence of excellent school crossing guards, also helps, he said.

Scituate sent no representative to the breakfast to pick up the town's award.

Terrence D. Schiavone, director of the Governor's Highway Safety Bureau, credited the police chiefs in the award-winning towns with leading the way in pedestrian safety. Unless a chief shows he's serious about it, his men won't support and enforce safety measures, he said.

He added he wished the highway safety bureau could be of more financial assistance to local pedestrian safety programs, but much of the federal funds are being alocated to fight drunk driving. "Pedestrian safety is not a priority," Schiavone said.

Still, he noted, a number of pedestrian fatalities involve alcohol, so enforcement of drunk driving laws may have a trickle-down effect. Greater awareness does have some impact on pedestrian safety, he added.

Dr. Leo J. Turo, director of school management services for the state Department of Education, noted there is a statewide pedestrian population of one million schoolchildren during 180 days of the year. Proposition 2½ cutbacks have meant the extension of walking distances for many children, and additional safety headaches for local police departments. He urged communities to involve parents and PTAs in walking small children to their bus stops.

Since the AAA's Pedestrian Program began in 1937, national pedestrian deaths have been reduced by 48 percent, from 15,500 then to 8,000 in 1983.

The program evaluates a town's pedestrian safety activities in the areas of accident record maintenance, safety legislation, enforcement, traffic engineering, traffic safety organization, quality of school traffic safety programs and public information and education programs.

The AAA annual reprot, containing pedestrian safety data from all over the country, is a good way for a community to measure its pedestrian safety performance against similar communities nationwide, said AAA General Manager Gerald W. Connolly, and a good weapon to take to fincom meetings when seeking financial support for safety programs.

from the kitchen

By Joan Pinkham

Fragrances don't always come bottled like precious perfumes costing a hundred dollars or so an ounce. Step outside on a crisp October day and you'll sniff the smoke from the wood fire and, if you're lucky, the fragrance of salt air. Returning into the kitchen, a pot of soup simmering on the stove may welcome you with a heady aroma. Those who visit an apple orchard at this season, know that the scent of the ripe fruit will be long remembered. Apple picking can be a family day trip yielding both a fun time and fruit for applesauce, pies, baked apples and just plain munching. Perhaps the most popular of the fruits is the McIntosh, developed in Ontario in an orchard owned by a man of that name. From Milly Carr we have this recipe which she notes is easy and called

APPLE PAN-DOWDY

1/4 c. Bisquick
1 c. packed brown sugar
1/2 tsp. salt
1 tsp. vinegar
1 c. water
1 tsp. vanilla
1 T butter
5 c. pared, sliced apples
Cinnamon, nutmeg and sugar as desired
1 1/2 c. Bisquick (additional)
3/4 c. rich milk or cream

Pre-heat oven to 400. Grease a 9x12" pan. Make a sauce out of the 1/4 c. Bisquick, and next four ingredients. Cook over low heat, stirring until thick and clear. Remove from heat and add vanilla and butter. Stir and cool. Place apples in baking pan and sprinkle with cinnamon and nutmeg. Then, mix 1 1/2 c. of Bisquick and the milk or cream and spoon over apples. Sprinkle with sugar and cinnamon. Finally, pour sauce over all. Bake at 400 for approx. 35 min., or until apples are done.

Though they say the foliage is rather dull this autumn, what the trees lack in color we find at the roadside stands, where orange pumpkins wait to be carved for Halloween and jugs of cider, Indian corn for the door and mums for the garden, bespeak New England in the fall. Glossy purple eggplant add their own splash of color and you might pick up a two-pounder for Margaret Ward's

EGG PLANT CASSEROLE

3/4 c. mushroom soup
1/4 c. mayonnaise
1 egg, beaten
1 small onion chopped very fine
1 large eggplant, sliced, pared and quartered
3/4 c. Ritz cracker crumbs
1/3 stick butter
1 tsp. liquid seasoning, or beef cube
Salt and pepper to taste

Simmer peeled eggplant about 10 min., drain well and mash. Combine with onion, mayo and soup. Add the liquid seasoning, salt and pepper. Fold in beaten egg. Place in buttered casserole. Cover with crumbs and dot with butter. Bake in 350 oven for 30 min. (Margaret says this can be made the day before).

This is the season when oysters are at their best. Succulent oysters were more popular than beef at the turn of the century when people living near the shore made them a staple in their diet. It's an old wives' tale about not eating them in the summer months--they're just not as plump then. For those who use their grill year-round, here's how Hank McAvoy does an

A move on the fastest runner on Earth

This is the plan.

We're going to march them back to the store. We're going to quit accommodating those that run the minute we put them on or within the first day.

This, Man-ufacturers of pantyhose, is a warning. And if we do it right, it's the beginning of a successful revolt.

Within the last week I have used eight pair of pantyhose, purchased at two different stores. I buy the cheap or medium cheap kind, with few exceptions. Even the $1 to $2 price is not acceptable when that means for nine months I'm paying up to $60 a month to clothe my legs . . . precariously.

PATCHES

By Lois Martin

What would we give for a pantyhose that'll stay with you through at least three washings.

I want you men to listen to this a minute, personal though it is. And we'll be happy someday to offer counterpoint for inconvenience in discussion of your garments that give you pause. (Was that phrased carefully enough?)

Last night I attended a function during which a run advanced up my calf. I crossed my leg to hide it but walking out meant it was visible to the world.

I was at the airport when my knee brushed something which resulted in a gaping hole in my hosed knee, about as attractive as two missing front teeth.

And I'm sick to death of playing Russian Roulette with pantyhose that won't stay up. I go up aisles in the supermarket looking for a shot at sneaking a tug at the waistband when no one's looking. If I fail, there's the threat of mid-thigh pantyhose at the checkout counter.

Thing is, we haven't made a move on it. I once heard someone say they have a perfectly sound, long-lasting, attractive type of pantyhose that they refuse to market . . . because they last and cut into profit.

But now I'm ready and I've got a game plan.

Today, for example, I'm wearing "Robin Sue Luxurious Hosiery". Yes, it's the right size. It's for medium to tall women, nude, with the non-roll waistband, flat knit for sheerness and smoothness, sandalfoot with new longer wearing toe. "And . . . there is, it says, "90-day unconditional replacement guarantee."

Bingo. They're inviting me to bring them back. I am lucky to get one day out of those hose, let alone 90. But I've been too lazy to read the package and to take them back.

From now on I shall combine economy with research. Robin Sue is going to hear from me, though hers is not the only brand I use.

This afternoon I'm replenishing my stock. Tomorrow when I put on the hose, I'm going to mark the date on the white paper on which Robin Sue wraps the hose. Then I'm reinserting that back into the outside folder. And I'm putting a tracer on the hose. If it fails to hold up, literally and figuratively, I'm taking them back.

A woman with whom I work was telling me she wears her hose until the run goes below her hemline. The rest of us have worn them out of desperation after the rear end in the underpinning evaporated. We've switched legs and made knots in the toe. That works and that hurts.

The thing is we are made to look unkempt because of our hose, like someone who hasn't combed her hair or pressed her skirt. And that's not fair.

We look dumpy in runny hose and we need to stop accepting the fact that most of us are buying hose that are guaranteed to run within hours.

My brief forays into buying better hose, incidentally, have yielded me about three washings, or three days wear.

The greater question here might be, who the devil is Robin Sue? Maybe if we knew her, we'd know if she was honored to have the hose named after her or not.

There is a coupon on the back of her package saying how and where to return hose that doesn't last to New Jersey. Personally, I'm not sure the post office is up to handling the volume.

But I invite you to join me in this upgrading effort of our hose. What other piece of clothing would we so readily accept as being ruined . . . keep it for wearing when no one can see it beneath something else and take the loss.

See you at the courtesy counter. And when I find out what brand of hose Robin Sue wears, I'll pass that along.

Towns fight toxic dumping in Wompatuck

State Senator Allan McKinnon (D-Norfolk and Plymouth) has been active this week in seeking a prompt solution to the storage of hazardous wastes in Wompatuck State Park.

After all information is gathered from the two state agencies involved, the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE) and the Department of Environmental Management (DEM), he intends to sponsor a joint meeting with Cohasset and Hingham officials together with representatives of the agencies. They will discuss the circumstances surrounding the chemical disposal with the intention to establish policies prohibiting such storage in the future.

The chemicals that have created such concern were removed last week from the park around the Cohasset reservoir section. They included seven gallons of the pesticide Diazanon and 10 five-gallon cans of solvent which had been stored in disused bunkers at the former Army installation. And state crews also removed boxes of asbestos insulation and an electrical transformer that could possibly contain cancer-causing PCBs.

Initial testing indicated there had been no damage to Cohasset's water supply, but the idea that such storage has taken place in a state park is unpalatable to many. One of the bunkers being used for the storage is only 150 feet from the upper reservoir that serves as storage capacity for Lily Pond, while the other two where the materials were discovered are several hundred yards from the reservoir.

Water Commissioner Peter Pratt wants some answers and is having a difficult time receiving them. After repeatedly requesting a copy of the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE) report which triggered the investigation, Pratt has hit a deadend.

He is probably going to file a Freedom of Information Act petition with the Secretary of State's office this week, following several attempts to receive the report from DEQE with no response.

From what he has gathered in conversations with state and local officials, the park, specifically the Cohasset area surrounding the reservoir site, has been used as a dumping ground for surplus chemicals and pesticides once used by the military.

According to Pratt, there is some indication that personnel assigned to the Forest Firefighting Bureau of DEM agreed to store the materials for the military bases where they purchased other useable surplus materials.

This allegation has not been verified by the state DEQE nor the DEM, although the agencies had been contacted by the Mariner.

"I would like to know why the state has been allowed to get away with this for years, when a private business would be crucified for the same thing?" Pratt asked.

Pratt intends to request soil samplings of the areas within the Cohasset watershed to determine any current contamination. In the meantime, he wants the DEQE to inventory the entire park for chemical-laden bunkers. The Cohasset Water Commissioners want to know exactly what is in each storage facility, they want their doors sealed tight, and the DEQE and DEM must agree never to store any hazardous materials in certain specified areas and to inform the town of materials stored in other areas of the park.

Pratt stressed there is no clear and present danger of ground water contamination by the chemicals found last week in the park. "But the point is, the water supply will be there always for future generations, and we can't allow a runaway state agency to engage in these kinds of practices," he added.

The only way this issue will be put to rest, he said, would be to inventory each bunker on the site and all hazardous materials be removed from the park.

Water Commissioners are particularly concerned with the possibility that PCB's within the oil of the electrical transformers found in the Cohasset section of the park, may have leaked. So far, he said, there is no indication that the highly toxic chemicals ever leaked into the groundwater.

Five large cans of Diazanon, a pesticide, have been removed from the park by DEQE. Ten large cans of a highly toxic solvent have been sealed but were not yet removed. An asbestos product has also been sealed within the bunker container, but has not yet been removed.

According to Pratt, the DEQE learned of the chemical waste sites in a report prepared for DEQE by a DEM official and issued last spring. His question is, "if the state knew about the chemicals in the spring, why didn't they clean it then?"

ENJOY FALL

The Fall Season is here! Reds, oranges, yellows and green mix colors and shades in the woods. A most tranquil place to enjoy this fascinating time of change is the South Shore Natural Science Center in Norwell. Five trails meander through the 21 acres of woodland and former pasture and can be walked in a leisurely manner in 15 to 40 minutes.

Check out the Woodchuck Trail, marked by its old stone wall borders, where chipmunks, squirrels and daytime birds play. For a longer walk, stroll the Jacobs Woods or Sylvester Bridge trails; listen for birds; look for the quick flash of the fox. The Gaudette trail wanders through former farmland and is a good example of how quickly cleared land reverts back to woods.

The Tupelo Trail was designed for the sight-impaired lover of nature. Because of its emphasis on aromas, textures, spatial perceptions and sounds, it is a delight to all. Close your eyes and follow the trail using the rope guide.

Championship sweep

Sept. 30, the 1984 South Shore Civic Men's Softball League Season came to a close with a four game sweep of Strawberry Parfait by Hugo's to clinch the championship trophy.

The final game of this best out of seven games series between the two league finalists, both Cohasset teams, resulted in a 9-4 win by Hugo's.

They led 3-0 after four innings, stretching their lead to 9-2 after six innings, thus capturing the league title.

Under the leadership of head coach Bob Malnoti and assistant coach Jimmy Burns, a strong defense and consistent good pitching by Ned and Tom Nista were key components of Hugo's four consecutive victories over the Strawberry Parfait.

Hugo's beat Building 19-the Hingham Police in a tough, five game series to advance to the finals.

Hugo's wishes to extend its sincere thanks to all the fans who gave their support throughout the season.

A banquet will be held in honor the 1984 league champions Hugo's and all other league participants Oct. 12 at the Weymouth Sons of Italy.

Frostbiters rebuild

Nov. 4, the Scituate Frostbiters will start a new season. Since its rebirth three years ago, this group has grown from four boats to 16 and looks forward to a few more members joining this year.

Sailing interclub dinghys with two person crews can be one of the most exhilarating forms of sailing. The fleet stresses a lot of fun while bettering racing skills.

Racing begins at noon every Sunday until April and boats are stored and launched from the parking lot adjacent to the Pier 44 restaurant on Scituate harbor.

For information call Peter Galvin at 545-6334 or 749-3025.

Candidates question

Next week we conclude our direction questions to candidates in the final election Nov. 6.

This question goes to Anna Doherty and William Golden, candidates for state senate:

What responsibility if any does the state have in governing abortion and what will be your position on that?

Claims

Jobless workers filing new claims for unemployment insurance will be covered by a revised maximum benefit amount. The new weekly maximum of $196, however, will only cover people who file a new claim for the week beginning Sunday, Oct. 7. All claimants who filed before that date will continue to be covered by the previous weekly benefit amount of $185.

By law, the maximum unemployment insurance amount is set each fiscal year based on the average wages earned by Massachusetts workers for a twelve-month period ending the previous March. The new calculation also becomes the basis for any workman's compensation claim.

Author at school

Best-selling author Jim Trelease will address parents, teachers and the general public October 24, at the Deer Hill School beginning at 1:15 p.m. Trelease, who is the author of The Read-Aloud Handbook, will speak on "Reading Aloud: Motivating children to make books into friends, not enemies."

The father of two children, Trelease also warns of the dangers from children "overdosing" on television and he offers a step-by-step plan by which parents can fend off the TV attack on children's living and learning.

A nationally recognized speaker, Trelease has been a featured lecturer for the American Library Association, the International Reading Association, the National Association for the Education of Young Children, and the National Council of Teachers of English.

Does anyone know these men? Or will admit it? It's not as bad as it looks (we've been told). It's just Firefighter Linwood Davis being embraced at his daughter's wedding by Bill McAuliffe of the Water Dept.

Hanover paved the way for Watershed laws

By Jane Lane

Whenever the subject of watershed protection is discussed, the Town of Hanover soon creeps into the conversation.

Although for reasons unlike Cohasset's, this nearby South Shore town was one of the first communities in the state to develop a comprehensive legal plan to protect their water supply.

The lessons learned in Hanover could serve as a useful tool for Cohasset, as we begin the long process of shielding our water supply from unwelcomed contamination or elimination.

Philip Beal, superintendent of the Hanover Water Dept. and John Libertine, past chairman of the Hanover Planning Board, remain two of the staunchest advocates of a Watershed Protection District.

But both men will admit, it was not an easy road to complete. The Town of Hanover had to mull it over at two separate Town Meetings, after years of discussion and study, before a district and two bylaws were approved.

It took from 1975 until Town Meeting of 1981, before residents overwhelmingly approved a Watershed Protection District.

And included in that group of supporters, were many watershed landowners. The final watershed districts comprise twenty percent of Hanover's buildable land. Once the most vehement opponents of the district, they changed their tune once they realized that without protection of this watershed, there may be no value to the land they own.

Beal and Libertine both agree, passage of a Watershed Protection District and bylaws was the best route they could have traveled in securing a future for Hanover's limited water supply. Although the real results of such an enormous undertaking won't be realized for many more years, they both feel Hanover has been a leader in fighting for the protection of its water sources.

The history of Hanover's plight began many years ago in the 1960's. A water treatment facility was constructed on advice of town engineers and outside consultants. Discolored well water was not unsafe for residents, they determined, but it was aesthetically unpleasing. To this day, Beal said, Hanover's ground water is a shade similar to "weak coffee" until it is "manufactured" in the plant.

At the same time, these engineers advised the town that it would be prudent to determine the exact sources
